Foreword

The purpose of this, the anniversary publication of THE STONEWALL, is to reflect the achievements of Stonewall Jackson Junior High School through the past thirty years, to portray the activities of the present, and to anticipate the challenge of the future.

Dedication

Mr. Ikenberry, with his quiet, progressive leadership, sound judgment, subtle humor, and sympathetic understanding has guided Stonewall Jackson Junior High School through twenty-six years. He has endeared our school to the hearts of all who have had associations with it. Therefore, we the members of the Yearbook Committee, to honor and to express our esteem and devotion to him, do dedicate this volume of

The Stonewall
to
Mr. W. C. Ikenberry, Our Principal.

1923

Through The Years

To have been a part of a school such as Stonewall Jackson Junior High has been the good fortune of many, for it has a glorious past and a great future. It is like a tree whose roots are so firmly planted in the soil of learning and integrity that the growth has been upright and strong. The wide-spreading branches are covered with fruit which we are privileged to gather. It seems fitting that we should offer a toast to the founders of our school - to those far-sighted citizens who planted so well that we at this distant day, may garner the fruit of their labor.

Stonewall Jackson Junior High School

The citizens of Roanoke realized the necessity of a new junior high school and were convinced that it should be in Southeast. Plans were made and the construction started, and it was not long before it was complete. There were eighteen rooms, a general science room, a home economics room, a gymnasium and auditorium combined, and an attractive office.

This beautiful building, standing in a grove of tall oak trees, had to have a name. Different organizations considered the naming of the school, and after much discussion, Jackson, like all of the other high schools of Roanoke, was named for a Virginian who has helped to make America great.

Now that the building was ready for opening, the students rushed in on February 1, 1924, to see their new school. The students and teachers were very proud of their new school and took great pride in keeping the rules and in upholding everything that was good in the school.

Each grade from the very beginning was organized. There was a news staff to help run a newspaper column one day a week in the Roanoke World News, a dramatic club, art and china painting club, and a choral club. Baseball, football, and basketball were great sports and each student "backed" his team.

The school was progressing in every way and the citizens realized the necessity of a new addition. This was brought before the school board and considered. In 1928 eight new class rooms were added, a new home economics department, wood-work department and library. This addition offered opportunity for more elective subjects.

As the school grew changes came. The school spirit continued to grow. The songs, "So Here's To Jackson Junior" and "Jackson Junior Spirit" were written. The most important change was the Student Citizenship Organization in 1929. It began as a committee and was called "Hall Welfare Committee". The Aim of this committee was to make the conduct in the hall, during the changing of classes, a pupil responsibility. As the interests and capabilities and activities of the pupils developed, the organization grew into a more comprehensive form and was called the Student Citizenship Organization.

The course of study was changing, and by 1931, there were many electives. In 1932, a depression swept the land and in spring 1934, to save money, the Eighth Grade was eliminated. From then until 1939 there was no Eighth Grade.

The present student body has a Student Citizenship Organization, with a president, vice president, secretary, a student council, a representative assembly with five bureaus, whose duties are service and leadership. The pupils have a great many opportunities in self direction and they take a real part in the affairs of the school, and the daily routine is made easier by their help and cooperation.

Stonewall Jackson has made great progress in training the character and minds of its students.

A Reflection

"If I had my life to live over," to paraphrase a once current song, "I'd spend it all at Stonewall Jackson." There is a sort of charm about the place that one cannot express but which one can unmistakably feel. Some call it atmosphere. To me it is the sum total of the cheery greeting, the pleasant smile, kindness, sympathy, loyalty, understanding, warmth, love. These leave unforgettable memories in our hearts, and what of pain there may be at times, fades away and is gone.

Stonewall Jackson's yesterdays, and today's, and tomorrow's are linked together in one continuing procession of people and events. Her former students are to be found in every walk of life. They are active in business, in industry, in the professions, in the armed forces, and in the homes throughout the land. Scenes in and about our school, so common-place to us now, were once familiar sights to them. People come and go, but institutions live on and on. To be a part of this never-ending parade is a lasting joy and a satisfying pleasure. For each day is a new day, and every morning presents a new life and a new opportunity.

It is small wonder then that I find deep satisfaction in being a part of Stonewall Jackson for it is a living, pulsating thing which, like an ever-flowing stream, continues on and on and on. It is life at its best.

Note:

"A Reflection" is the response to The Yearbook Committee's request to Mr. Ikenberry to jot down for the faculty and the students of Stonewall Jackson his impression of our school as observed and experienced "through the years."

Ideals--- Of Stonewall Jackson

The ideals of General Thomas Jonathan "Stonewall" Jackson are the ideals upon which Stonewall Jackson Junior High School has gone forward through the years.

Earnestness of purpose characterized "Stonewall" Jackson, the man. As a youth he struggled under adverse circumstances to gain his education. His unflinching steadiness in following through on a purpose helped to win for him many of the victories of his later life. "There stands Jackson like a stone wall" — these words spoken by a fellow general have come down to us as a symbol of General Jackson's earnestness of purpose and his bravery when danger threatened. The same earnestness of purpose, in thirty years of serving the youth of the Southeast community, has been an ideal of the school which bears his name.

Determination to do the right, as he saw the right, combined with his great military genius, made General Jackson a man who was admired alike by friend and foe. "I believe I must build a noble character. Therefore, I will do right because it is right." These words are from the Code of Stonewall Jackson Junior High School. Obedience, respect for authority and property, truthfulness, trustworthiness, loyalty — all these ideals of right living have been guiding lights through the school's years of service.

On the march, General Jackson always carried with him his Bible and Napoleon's "Maxims of War." He combined a devout religious spirit with the strict discipline of a true soldier. So, the ideals of the school have embodied the development of the spirit, as well as of the mind and the body.

PORTRAITS

Looking down into our hall
From his portrait on the wall
"Stonewall" Jackson has a view
Of activities we pursue.

Many students pass his way
Exchanging classes during the day,
Carrying books, papers, wraps,
Comics, balls, pencils, caps.

Some are laughing, some are talking,
Some are running, others walking,
Swinging hands, chewing gum,
To their classes gaily come.

Many teachers have weary looks
For the pupils don't study their books
Unless they are kept after three,
Then they're studious as can be.

Before the principal, looking stern,
The General sees a fellow squirm.
To the office he's been sent
For some mischief to repent.

Many as leaders do quite well,
Others in scholarship excel.
Honor points they have gained;
On the plaque he sees their names.

Boys and girls exchange shy looks,
Write their names in character books;
In their notes pen silly lines
And hand each other Valentines.

If songs could walk or talk or play,
They'd pass his portrait every day;
Each hour brings voices raised in tune
From down the hall in the Music Room.

When lunch is served, the place is gay;
Students pass with bag or tray;
Enjoy ice cream, then out they hurry
To romp and play without a worry.

The doors swing wide, visitors appear,
They come at times throughout the year;
Supervisors, friends, others;
Most often it's fathers and mothers.

Thus, "Stonewall" Jackson views our hall
From his portrait on the wall.
If he could speak, you'd hear him say,
"Do your duty every day; be loyal to the red and gray."
