With the sweltering summer heat and memories of days on the beach, 1206 students filled the halls on August 23 anticipating the first school year in the new millennium. Last minute summer trips were taken. Junior Betsy James explored New York city over Labor day weekend. Back to school shopping became a number one priority with students heading toward the bigger malls in D.C. and Greensboro. On the first day of school, the student body toured the completed Hope Memorial Garden which honors students who had passed away. Underneath new ceilings in the hallways and with a refurbished laminated wood floor in the gym, the school looked brighter than ever. In addition to the physical changes, novice teachers and a resource police officer, Pat Coles were added to the school staff. The updated look and the inexperienced sophomore class, one by one, blended in with the school traditions to create a year that emphasized individualism.

As nine hour days of band practice commenced and the golf team started practicing, students began thinking about that inevitable first day of school.

Meg Davies(12) was knighted in the opening assembly which traditionally declared that the year had started. For the first time, fifth year French and Spanish classes were designated as Advanced Placement. What began as a fad started by senior girls, the customized "Senior" tee-shirts soon spread throughout the senior class with variations including eye-dye and glitter paint. As a record number of fans turned out for Friday night football games, the team faced controversy over an ineligible player during their nine and one season. (VHS) ruled against the team, dropping the official record to three and seven, knocking the team out of a playoff spot. Snow and ice helped jump start winter break as students got out of school two days early. Despite the onset of winter, students strived to make it through the first semester of school one way or another.

Students continue to plan for their future while they are away for the SUMMER

Whether it was Young Life camp, band camp, church camp, or medical camp, students were involved. Karolina Roszak(10) and Samantha Whiteside(10) attended AHEC's Health Careers Summer Institute at Radford University in June. During the week-long program Karolina and Samantha examined health care issues by completing team projects.

Karolina said, "My favorite project would have had to of been the cadaver lab. We looked at body organs and labeled the different body parts. One group had a man's head that was split down the middle. The worst part of the lab was the fact that the man was looking right back at me!" said Karolina.

Karolina was faced with many challenges throughout the week. "One of the hardest things that I had to do was prick my own finger for a blood sample," said Karolina. The students were testing their own blood so that they could see what blood type they were. "I had to get one of my friends to prick my finger; I couldn't do it myself," she said.

Hanging on to the ceiling, Mark Hickman(10) looks down to see how high off of the ground he is. "I was hanging upside down from the ceiling, about to fall down and get a boo boo," said Mark. Summer school students went on field trips like rock climbing and bowling during their sessions.

"We were laughing because it was funny to see four big girls on a kiddy slide," said Kathryn Kostura(10). Kathryn, and Ashley Otey(10) visited the Salem Fair in July with a friend from out of town. "Everyone was acting goofy the whole time we were at the fair," said Kathryn.

After walking around Paris all morning, Emily Graham(11) and her sister take a break in front of the Eiffel Tower. "The Eiffel Tower was so huge! It was so neat to see it in person," said Emily. Emily's family walked down to the Tower and stood in line for an hour before finally being able to climb to the top.

Anxiously awaiting a victory, David Good(12), Phil Heilig(12), Les Bowers(12), Bryce Gannon, and Emily Hanson(12) support the Knights by showing some skin and braving the cold. "We paint our chests because it's fun. Sometimes it gets cold, but most times it's not cold at all," said Les. Students sometimes found it necessary to wait in line as long as 30 minutes for tickets to games against rivals like Salem and Patrick Henry. The team had an unofficial 9-1 record and sellout crowds because of their wins over teams that had previously not been defeated.

Drummer Adam Sowder(11) practices in the band room during an early morning in Jazz Band. "I started playing drums in 6th grade because I was fascinated by the drummers on TV and I wanted to play like them," said Adam. The Jazz Band met early in the mornings and musicians often stayed after to play their music with friends until homeroom began at 8:20.

Cramming for a test in the front lobby, Paul Vernon(12) gets a head start on his senior year. "I was studying American History because our teacher had hinted at a pop quiz on the first week of school," he said. Even during the beginning week, homework and tests awaited students as they wandered the halls, looking for their classes.

"I liked [high school]. It was much better than junior high." These words, spoken by Erica Domalski(10), reflected the thoughts of one sophomore as she entered the building on Monday, August 21.

Students returned to find higher cafeteria prices, more senior parking, and brand new faces in the hallways as a record number of sophomores arrived, ready to learn. A new floor in the gym also welcomed students, as well as trophy cases in the lobby and pillars in the auditorium. As sophomores adjusted to high school, seniors had to adapt to the realization that they would soon be graduating. One by one, students returned to the high school for their first day of 180 days to come.

Jennifer Long(12), Michelle Bright(12), Kacey Beckner(12), Elizabeth Morris(12), Katie Westerman(12), and Melissa Dunning(12) pick up their yearbooks in the gym while wearing shirts they made displaying their senior pride. "We thought making the t-shirts would be fun because we got to make something to display our school spirit," said Kacey. Several groups of seniors made shirts unique to their tastes and spirit.

Quietly dozing during the Knighting ceremony, Andrew Brown(11) catches some sleep as the first day begins. "I fell asleep because I was bored!" Andrew said. Students were not accustomed to waking up early, and were, consequently, late to school.

“GO JUNIORS GO!” are the shouts coming from the junior cheerleaders Monday night. Andrew Brown(11) Bryce Diffenderfer(11), and Ryan Fleming(11) caught fellow teammate Matt Cantrell(11) at the end of a cheer. “We did our best to cheer for our girls, who wrongly lost by one!” said Andrew.

Preparing to hike the football, Stacey Woodfield(11) sets up the play. Juniors did not know what to expect from the game because, for some of them, it was their first time playing football. “Before and during the game, I was kind of scared. I had no idea what to expect,” said Stacey. “We all ended up having a great time.” Seniors ended the game by beating the junior team 7-6.

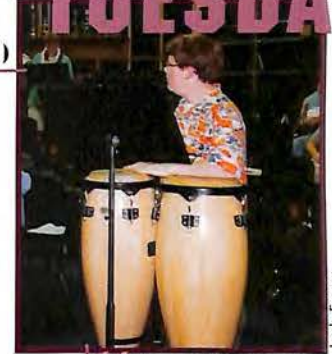

“Play ‘Booger’ was our secret play for the Powder Puff game,” said Meghan Barrier(11). Near the end of the game when the junior coaches called play “Booger”, Betsy James(11) pushed Meghan onto the field. The quarterback, Lindsay Reynolds(11) threw a pass to Meghan, who went on to push the ball up the field. “Although we didn’t score with play Booger it was worth it because I got to play despite my injury,” said Meghan.

Members of the junior team gather at Elizabeth Mulvaney’s(11) house to prepare for the Powder Puff game Monday afternoon. Elizabeth, Lindsay Reynolds(11), and Amanda Barnhart(11) braided each other’s hair before they left for the game. “We put face paint or war paint on to show how serious we were about the game,” said Lindsay.

On Josh Shepherd’s(12) shoulders, Mandi Watson(12) dances to the music being played by fellow classmate Ryan Smith(12). “I had never been to the bonfire before, so I decided to go since it was my senior year,” said Mandi. After dancing, students went on to play games organized by the SCA.

Matt Zeller(12) and Tyler McLellan(12) aid in decorating the senior halls on Thursday night. Seniors arrived at school around 5p.m. and didn't leave until 11p.m. They hung their poster from the roof on the outside of the building. “Our idea was a success until the bottom of the poster wouldn't cling to the brick wall,” said Matt.

Seniors often shouted for the sophomores to “sit down” in respect for the older classes.

Leaning against the cafeteria wall, Casey Williams(10) and his date make plans before going onto the dance floor. “We were deciding on getting pictures now or waiting until later,” said Casey. Instead of having chairs line the wall, this year the walls were chair-free so students could stand up and take a break. The halls were decorated and filled with potted plants and strewn with purple and blue streamers.

“Miss Mary Mack” is the name of the game as Michael Armstrong(11) and JT Nance(11) prepare for the Homecoming game against E.C. Glass. “It always feels so good to win,” said Michael. The Homecoming Court included Princess Beth Wajciechowski(12), King Jason Owenby(12), Queen Tessa Ashwell(12), and Prince Dwayne Jennings(12). Those chosen, along with several other students selected to represent their classes, rode in automobiles while waving to onlookers that lined the streets during the parade. Afterwards, they sat with their families during the game until the coronation ceremony.

While music swirls all around them, senior Elizabeth Hurt(12) and her date slow dance to records spun by the DJ. "The music was good too, great to dance to, but they should've played a couple more country songs," said Elizabeth. Several different genres of music were played, from hip-hop to dance favorites such as "Shout" and "Love Shack."

Fast music, bright lights, and lots of formal wear helped students to dance the night AWAY

"A MidKnight Dream" was the theme as students moved and grooved endlessly throughout the night. Although last year it was placed in the gym, this year's dance returned to the cafeteria with students and teachers alike getting down and dancing through disco balls and fog lights. The hall was decorated with gallons of glitter and purple and blue streamers. Paper lined the marble floor and turned the usual drab gray into a grand walkway.

One major issue facing all students was the important question of "Where do we eat?" The decision between someplace classy and someplace fun was a tough one. While some students opted for more formal places like Luigi's or Steak and Ale, other chose the casual path. "We went to Chico and Billy's because the food is good and cheap," said Samantha Broadhurst(11). Whether it was a pricey gourmet or inexpensive pizza, students dined before a night of dancing.

Students are so busy with in-school and out of school activities, they have to eat on the RUN

“My mom makes dinner almost every night,” said Jenny Welfare(11), “but I never get to eat it.” Students had so much going on in their lives that they rarely had time to sit down and eat at their homes. “Two nights a week I had dance practice, the rest of the evenings I had my job and other things like school activities going on,” said Jenny. “I loved it when I had a free evening. I got to sit down and eat with my family.”

Stephanie Sult’s(10) life was so busy that she did not have time to eat her breakfast at home. “It was easier to buy something at school rather than make something at home,” said Stephanie.

Jason Craighead(11) was enrolled in a zero period and had to eat his breakfast during home room. “I have to be at school at 7:30 so if I wanted to eat breakfast at home I had to get up even earlier than I normally would,” said Jason. “Sometimes I just ate breakfast at school.”

Students who participated in clubs and athletics often times did not leave school until five or six o’clock in the evening. “I have track practice until 5:30 everyday and then I have homework, church and a bible study until 9, so I grab dinner around 9 o’clock,” said Lauren Gross(12). Whether students had to eat breakfast before first period or snack on their dinner before bed, students made sure that they ate their meals.

“Usually I don’t eat out that often,” said Kristin Polverino(11). Students take a break from their routine by eating out. “Sometimes I’ll make an exception and go out with my friends. We love bothering people that come into the restaurant where we are eating,” said Kristin. “It is great to see their reaction to us.”

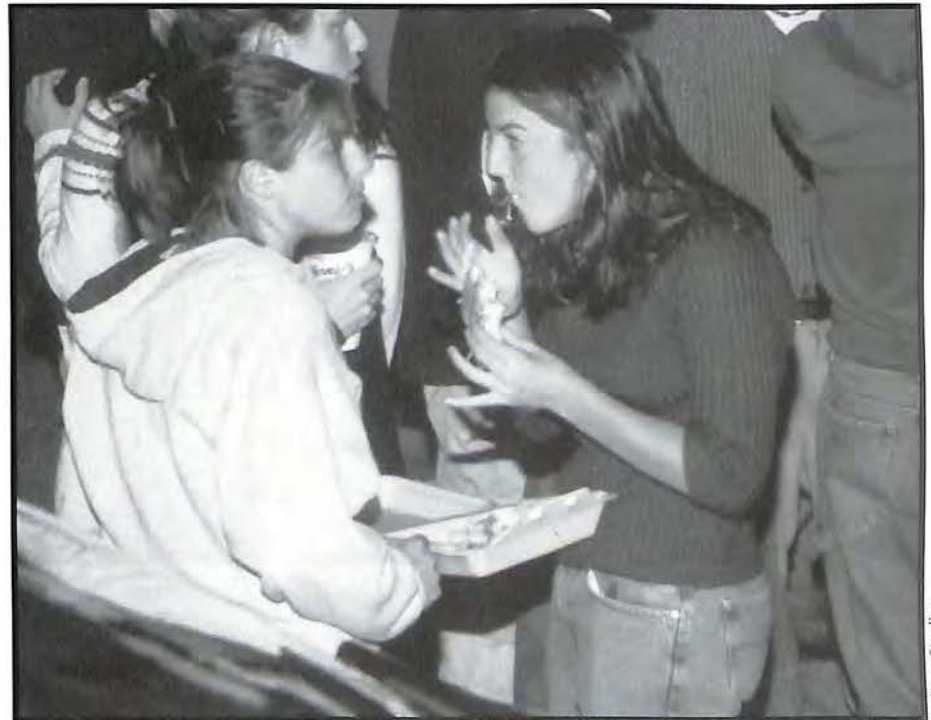

“I eat weird foods,” said Kristin English(10). Kristen had been a vegetarian for six and a half years. The cafeteria does not have many food choices for vegetarians so most students with those eating habits bring their lunch to school. “Because I am a vegetarian, I’ve had to pack my lunch since I was in third grade,” said Kristin.

Social hour begins at lunch for Mark Vitello(10). “We joked around a lot and laughed the whole time we were in the cafeteria,” said Mark. Students used their time for lunch to catch up on homework and the latest news. “It was a nice break from classes, lunch gave us time to relax,” said Mark.

Having no time to eat between school activities, Keri Lynch(10) and Avelyn Austin(10) chow down before the bonfire in October. Students were overwhelmed with activities during Spirit Week. “We were so busy with after school functions that we often had to eat on the run,” said Keri.

Holidays usually bring food into the classrooms. “We don’t get to have parties in class but Ms. Stanger made an exception,” said Julie Lawrence(10). Although technically not allowed, classes held holiday parties throughout the year. “Whenever we did have the chance to bring in food for a party, someone always forgets the milk,” said Julie. “What I would like to know is how could we have brownies without milk?”

With their cars requiring gas and bills needing to be paid, students had to work hard for the MONEY

The laws of capitalism influence the rise and fall of the market prices. Gas prices rose the highest since the 1970s as crude oil became more expensive.

However, gas was not the only expense students had. All sources of fun--movies, food, and just hanging out with friends--all required the monetary funds. Students worked on mostly weekends or after school. Others also put in hours during school as part of their day with DECA, a club that sends students to work during normal school hours.

"I work at McDonalds. I usually work drive-through and run shifts, and occasionally I work on the grill," said Nicole Wells(12), an active participant of the club.

One of the local restaurants, Famous Anthony's, employed students to wash dishes, wait tables, and to be hosts and hostesses. "I washed dishes and got to cook," said Michael Ford(10).

Students chose jobs that reflected their interests or that provided easy money. Childcare centers, plant urseries, retail stores, and restaurants proved job-worthy and paid the money for the students' needs.

Cash registers are the needed technology as Jennifer Hart(10) puts in her hours at Kroger. "I like Kroger's because the people I work with are so funny," said Jennifer. Grocery stores were popular for students who wanted to start out with a flexible job that paid minimum wage.

With students and faculty members alike working up a sweat for charity, the Boys and Girls Varsity basketball teams got off to an electrifying start at the MidKnight Madness game. Students played against not only their teachers and superiors, but also their own parents, as in the case of Sarah Henderson(12), whose mother got into the act and shot some hoops.

The fund-raiser earned almost $1400 and 26 boxes of canned food for local charities. That wasn't the best part for Sarah Henderson(12), who said "I think the best part was the student/faculty scrimmage. It's always good to show the teachers up!".

Both the Boys and Girls coaches got into the act, running up and down the court and giving themselves a workout. Along with having fun and teaching their instructors, students raised money for a good cause while having a good time.

The bell rings Friday afternoon, students rush for the parking lot, finally free for the WEEKEND

The anticipation mounts throughout the day on Friday. A two-day break was ahead for all. After the final bell, teachers and students headed for the parking lot. They were on their way to the weekend.

Certain students, however, did not have the weekend off from school activities. Members of athletic teams like Boys' and Girls' basketball, had practice on Saturday mornings, and often games on Friday and Saturday nights. "I think that it is good that we have practices on Saturday mornings because we need the work as a team," said Breeze Ross (11) a member of the Girls' Varsity Basketball Team. "The only thing is that it really limits what we can do on Friday nights." Nevertheless, students piled into the gym on Fridays and Saturdays to support their friends as they competed against rival schools. Often, home games were sold out hours before the start of the game. When the boys basketball team played Patrick Henry at home, the game was sold out at 6:30.

As the weekends came to a close on Sunday evenings, students prepared themselves for the upcoming week. Monday morning the count-down would begin, only five, four, three, two, one more day until the weekend.

Pig Day

Snorting was a regular activity for over one hundred juniors in Ms. Wakeland's classes. New this year, Pig Day occurred almost every week to honor the people that had gone far beyond the call of duty as an English student. Pig award winner Courtney Marshall(11) said, "A 'Pig' was chosen because one day Ms. Wakeland asked the class to find something in the MLA handbook and the person who found it received a pig lollipop. Ms. Wakeland said, 'Pigs are smart and so are you!' as she awarded the prize, and the 'pig' was created!"

From then on, a special card was passed from the previous "pig" to a new "pig" through a ceremony. Courtney said, "Ms. Wakeland tells the class why she chose the person to become 'pig.' Then she says 'The pig is...,' and the whole class snorts three times, and the name announced by Ms. Wakeland." The card enabled the "pigs" to leave class at the senior bell, eat or drink in class, and be excused if he or she was little late to class.

The "pig" usually kept the card for a week; however, some "pigs" got to keep it for longer. For example, Courtney kept the pig award for two weeks because of her well-written notes. This unique but inspiring ritual of 11th grade English was something that would stand out in the memories of the students in Ms. Wakeland's classes.

Happy with her accomplishments as an English student, Courtney Marshall(11) accepts the "pig award" from previous 'pig', Ryan Boyle in Ms. Wakeland's class. Courtney earned the award because of her neat, well-written notes that were color-coded and highlighted.

Striving to keep her eyes open, Erin Culpepper(12) daydreams during a class discussion of Heart of Darkness, a novel her AP English class read. Erin said, "[Discussing] it helps to share ideas about the meaning of the book in order to better understand it."

Leaning in to see an improv book, Celia McCauley(10), reads from a drama class skit with Alisha Heathcock(10) and Ms. Paradzinski before performing. Celia said, "I chose this class because I love to act and acting is a great escape from everyday life."

Squinting to see through her camcorder, Tabitha Rand(12) films students drinking coffee while listening to peers read poems for a poetry house in Ms. Dinkins's AP/Dual English class. With candles lit, lights turned out, and students dressed comfortably, the effect of a true coffee house was created.

Giving up her one chance for food during the day, Ginger Harris(10) struggles to finish reading an English assignment that was assigned for her 7th period class during lunch. Ginger was reading "Boys and Girls" which was part of advanced sophomore English classes' unit on short stories.

Displaying Creativity

"It was amazing how much talent we had in this school this year," said Emily Hanson(12). Students discussed their opinion of the May art show in Ms. Kellie Jenkins AP-dual enrollment English class. Most teachers took their class periods to walk students through the show. "We went as a class in intro to calc," said Alex Poetek(12). "I thought it was amazing to see that much talent, because it is not something that we see every day, she said.

Student artists with Ms. Pat Carr and Ms. Sandi D'Allesandro spent Monday evening working on displays for the two-day event in the auditorium; the show was open to all students and community members. "There were about 500 people who attended the opening reception," said Ms. Carr. The art teachers estimated that about 1500 pieces were displayed by the advanced artists.

Several art students made profits off of their artwork. Carissa Hensley(12), Jessica Hedrick(12), and Catherine Anderson(12) were able to sell their artwork to faculty and community members.

The art show was traditionally held at the end of May, but this year due to SOL testing, the show was presented earlier. Several students and artists suggested that perhaps there could be two art shows, but according to Ms. Carr that would be a tremendous job. She said, "I cut over three hundred mats in the days before the show...sawing and sawing." Despite the amount of work though, it was said that the show was "fabulous." Ms. Carr added, "These were 28 of the most incredible senior artists that we have ever had."

Exploring the Capitol

Jennifer Fralin

It's 4:00am. and alarm clocks are ringing. Students are crawling out of bed. It's time to get ready for the government field trip. They forced themselves to brush their teeth, grab their bags, and drive to school, where they climbed onto the bus and tried to go back to sleep for the long ride. What were the best parts of social studies this year? According to Mr. Joe LaRacco, somewhere at the top of the list was the dual-enrollment government trip to Richmond. "By observing the committees in action, and by talking to our elected officials, the students have a greater appreciation of how our state government works and how difficult a process [it is] to get a law passed," said Mr. LaRacco. However, not everyone got to join in the enriching experience.

Sarah Chapman(12) and Ashley Scruggs(12) missed the bus to Richmond. "I spent the night at Ashley's house and our alarm didn't go off so we didn't wake up until one of our friends called us as the bus was leaving... at first I was upset but then we just kind of laughed, reset the alarm, and went back to sleep," said Sara. Not only did they miss the trip, but they had to go to school too. "My friends laughed and joked with us [about having to go to school]."

The people who were able to wake up in time to catch the bus were able to explore Richmond and the Virginia Legislature, while the others were forced to come to school for a regular school day. The bus does not wait for anyone.

"I plan on shooting archery for a really long time," said Alliseon Prather(10). Like other sophomores, Alliseon enjoyed the archery unit that her gym class took. Outside of school, Alliseon practiced as often as possible with her own bow on a target outside of her house.

Driver's Ed

Outside of School

Learning to drive is more complex than simply discovering the difference between the gas pedal and the brake. However, students now have options when taking the mandatory drivers education class. With places such as Saker's and Roanoke Valley Driver Training School, which offered programs over shorter periods of time, school sponsored classes seem to have faded in popularity. "Instead of taking drivers ed at the high school, I took drivers ed over the summer for an extra class," said Michael Russo(10).

Although such programs were often more expensive than courses at school, driver training schools were seemingly always filled with people. "I tried to get into [Driver's Ed] this summer at Saker's, but there were no available spaces," said Kristin English(10). The two week Driver's education course during the summer and the six week option during the school year was offered at private schools, as opposed to the full semester required by the county. This appealed to students who were always pressed for time.

Yet students still take the driver's ed classes every year. Reasons varied, but most just came down to either not having the time or the money. "I took [Driver's Ed] in school because of the money and time I would have to find to take it after school," said Patrick Boylan(10). Despite the popularity of driving in general, some students simply couldn't find the time to take driver's ed and therefore were unable to receive their licenses when they turned sixteen. Whether in school or out, new drivers had to take driver's ed somewhere.

coming together as a team

Rocking the stands at Dwight Bogle Stadium over 4,000 fans cheered victoriously. In the last five minutes of the game, quarterback Jacob Lewis (12), threw a 45 yard pass to wide receiver Daniel Payne (11) for the win against the undefeated state champions, Salem Spartans. The fans rushed on to the field to celebrate with the team. David Noad (11) said, "When everyone from the stands jumped [up] and swarmed around us, they had so much excitement which gave me an indescribable feeling of joy."

The final score was 23-19. "It was the first time that we had beaten them since 1984," said Craig Sellers (10). "It was so so sweet," said Ryan Jones (11).

The team described their win over Pulaski as "A Knight To Remember. Jacob passed for 408 yards that game, and Chris Gould (12) had 21 tackles, and rushed for 78 yards. "We're really good. The last game, ... that was the way to end the year," said Chris. The final score 47-14.

The team credited their wins to team work, and the hard work they put in to making this past season a great one. "I have never been part of a team as hard working, talented, determined, and unified as a family," said Jason Ronquillo (12). "We played great as a team, everything just clicked," said Jason Horn (11).

"Even though we didn't play our best when we got there, we still had fun in the process. big win charges season

Victory can come easily, or it can be hard fought. For the 13 member girls tennis team, the RVD championship was a given - a match that they were expected to win; opposition, such as Patrick Henry and William Fleming, provided no tough competition. “Patrick Henry and Fleming don't really have very good teams; it's not too big of a deal to beat them,” Heather Lloyd(11) said.

However, beating E.C. Glass was a sweeter, more surprising victory than sweeping the Districts. Glass had defeated the team in every attempt over the past ten years.

Playing on their home courts, the team staged a 5-4 upset over the favored Hilltoppers. “We were all so excited about beating Glass,” Jennifer Adkins(12) said. “We just went crazy, and we started screaming and jumping up and down. the ball, and into friendship

“Sleepovers started everything. They got us off on the right foot and began our season-long bonding,” said Courtney Fitzpatrick(10). Staying up all night, watching movies, and creating their ‘Game Day’ t-shirts helped to build an unbreakable team, one with no cliques or grade distinctions. “I’ve never been on a team like this before,” said Lauren Goldsmith(11). “We were all so close, and we had tons of fun together.”

That fun even included a cake fight in the school library after the Senior Night game. “I was cutting the cake for our party, and Kathleen Lemker’s mom told me to smear icing on Kathleen’s face. That started an all-out food fight!” said Courtney. “We aren’t even supposed to eat in the library, and here we were throwing icing everywhere!” said Sarah Lyon(10).

The team’s unity pulled the players through tough matches against main rival Patrick Henry, and inspired creations of cheers on the supportive bench. Lauren said, “The friendships we built were awesome. I’ll never forget this season.”

How Aggressive are you???

1 Some one cuts in front of you in the cafeteria, do you...

- A. Roll your eyes, and ignore them.
- B. Say "Excuse Me" and get back in your spot.
- C. Say "Excuse You" and push them out of the way.

2 You get a bad grade on a paper you spent hours on, do you...

- A. Spend the rest of the day moping about it.
- B. Politely ask the teacher to look over your paper again.
- C. Throw the paper on the teacher's desk and demand that he/she change the grade.

3 You are walking down the hall and get stuck behind a really slow person, do you...

- A. Walk impatiently behind them.
- B. Try to duck around them.
- C. Push the person out of the way and march down the hall.

4 You get detention for being tardy, because you had to walk from the basement to the annex, do you...

- A. Take the detention and sit down angrily.
- B. Take the detention and bad mouth the teacher when he or she is not around.
- C. Throw your books down and get into a heated argument with the teacher.

5 Some one almost hits you while they are speeding out of the parking lot, do you...

- A. Think to yourself, "I'm glad they didn't hit me."
- B. Yell out loud, but with your windows rolled up
- C. Scream at them and honk your horn, with a possible hand motion out the window.

Mostly A's
You are a very passive person with hardly any aggression.

Mostly B's
You have some aggression, but still handle situations relatively calmly.

Mostly C's

Undefeated in the district. No losses at home. Two straight victories over Pulaski, after losing in their three previous encounters. All of this was accomplished by the girls' basketball team. Yet, they were still in the shadow of the boys' team, going without much outside support. Except for a small, solid fan base, students seemed to ignore the girls' impressive feats. Jamie Funk(12) said, "At least our families always came out to cheer for us. My grandfather was my biggest fan."

To compensate for the lack of major crowd energy, the team energized themselves before games. "Lindsay [Reynolds] always tried to pump us up. She'd be really

The Marching Band

Time, effort and dedication produce a memorable halftime experience

"Who is that?, What is that?" buzzes through the crowd of a home football game. Fans were referring to the bull that performs with the marching band at halftime at games. Parts of the crowd even thought that it was a real bull. Danielle Witt (12), and Stephanie Henderson(11) performed a Latin flaired bull and matador routine in the show. "Mr. Tucker needed someone to be the bull and I was the only one willing to do it," said Danielle. Stephanie and Danielle designed their routine in about 30 seconds. They said that most was improvised when they got on the field. Describing the costume, Danielle said, "It's a sweatshirt with hair attached to it. The hands are mittens with hair sewn on, and the head is a hat with glued on horns." Other students might have been embarrassed about running in front of thousands of people, but Danielle said, "I always wanted to be a mascot or just someone in a costume on the field." So now, Danielle's secret is out.

Friendship and Helping out make these organizations work

On September 20th, on their way into the parking lot, students saw something a little different. Close to 200 students gathered around the side yard for the annual "See you at the Pole". The nationwide celebration included students and faculty who assembled around flagpoles to pray.

That morning students joined hands and bowed their heads together to sing and pray for the school and for the United States. Participating schools across the nation attended the meeting at the same date, time, and location as the students here. FCA leaders organized the meeting with Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Tucker's assistance. John Hartman(12) said the best part of "See you at the Pole" was "seeing your friends and others you are familiar with all praying as you do." Sonya Lepper(12) said, "My hope is that people came to step out and take a stand for their faith.."

Some controversy has surrounded this occurrence in the past. In 1998, protestors gathered next to the worship. This year, a car beeped repeatedly driving by, distracting the prayer, but John said, "Most [people] respected the prayer and there weren't any big reactions."

Christina Rexrode(12) said, "I hope this is one event that people will remember from this year."

Dedication, long hours, and teamwork produce award winning publications for the student body

Imagine walking into one of your classes on the first day of school and seeing 17 other students. There is one difference from other classes though, the other 17 students are all of the opposite sex. Joel Shelton (12), Charles Suslowicz(10), and Josh Eanes(10) were the only three males among 34 women in publication classes. They spent one period everyday listening to "girlie" music, and hearing the latest fashion news and dating gossip while working on the Knight Letter or Accolade. They even spent 16 hours December 8th on a bus to Washington D.C. for a field trip to visit the Newseum in Arlington, VA. The boys also had to endure a full afternoon of shopping, and a "chick flick" or two along the way.

Girls in the class appreciated the boys. Katie Wagner(11) said, "They bring something to the class and work just as hard as any of the girls do!" Elizabeth Mulvaney(11) said, "The classes are slowly getting a little more masculine. I hope more boys join in the future and possibly publication classes will be at least close to 50-50." Josh said, "It's definitely a double-edged sword. I think we should have more guys, but I don't have a problem with the way it is now." Joel added, "It's not that the paper isn't popular for guys, I think it has more to do with scheduling priorities. The benefits [of this class] greatly outweigh the high levels of estrogen that I face daily."

Art, DECA, Science, TSA, Knight Notes

Students join clubs to pursue interests during and after school

In the classroom students learn the basics, but in a club, students learn through hands-on experiences that go beyond the textbook. Members of the Art Club used their artistic abilities in the community when they decorated windows with their winter art at the local Arby's. DECA used their knowledge from the classroom about the business world when they went to regional, state, and national competitions where they sold a variety of products. TSA helped to raise finances for activities, including a photography competition, by selling candy to the faculty and students. The Knight Notes used their varied musical abilities and participated in sing-alongs at nursing homes and performed for a school board dinner meeting.

Knight Notes member Kelly Bradshaw(10) said "I liked the different variety of music like Broadway, and some selections from Disney movies; with a big selection, it's easy to get a few songs that everyone likes."

Students enjoyed being members of clubs that took learning outside of the classroom. Science Club members went on field trips to Virginia Tech's veterinary school and visited science museums. Members participated in litter pick ups, weekend hikes, had guest speakers, and provided homeless families with holiday gifts. Thanks to clubs based on academic classes, students were able to explore their interests at a more in-depth level.

Lauren Dowdy(12) and Jennifer Wilson(12) won $25.00 dollars each for raising more money over the other Cave Spring students. BETA Club helped raise money for the scholarships provided by the Education Foundation.

Cruising down Chaparral the Leo Club members show their spirit in the homecoming parade. The Leo Club's idea for the parade float included a fishing boat carrying club members. Club president, Lauren Smith(12) said, "We thought our float was one of the most popular in the parade."

Collecting unique items and attractive awards helps clubs aid others

For two weeks in the lobby, red and black spray painted, five foot tall cardboard boxes overflowed with paper products. Toilet paper, paper towels, plates, napkins, cups, tissues: these products are different from the typical nonperishable food drives that were conducted each Thanksgiving and Holiday season.

Club members collected macaroni and cheese last year and this year decided to collect paper products for the Roanoke Area Ministries a.k.a RAM House. The RAM House spends over $7000 dollars a year on paper products. Therefore, the Leo Club members decided to help out by lowering that cost so that money could be used for food and other items for the shelter. The student body donated "an amazing amount" of paper products, over 800, said Leo Club president, Lauren Smith(12). "I was very pleased with the outcome. I'm glad Cave Spring was able to be involved in something like this to benefit the less fortunate." RAM House picked up all of the products before the holiday season.

Leo Club offered faculty parking on December 1st to the senior class for winning the drive. "I know anyone would rather park in faculty than senior parking, junior parking, the driving range, or sophomore lane", said Lauren. Teachers donated their parking spaces for the cause.

Carrey Wagoner(10) and Stephanie Harvey(10) talk about the interesting ways they can fill their stockings for the Salvation Army. "This is one of the best projects Key Club does all year; we fill stockings with fun toys like PLAY-DOH, Matchbox cars, and crayons. The children at the Salvation Army really enjoy them," said Stephanie. After members filled the stockings, Key Club officers filled a truck with stockings and presents to deliver to the Salvation Army a week before Christmas. Close to 75 stockings were filled this year by club members. Club members also sponsored angels from angel trees at Tanglewood Mall.

1. The crowd roars with appreciation at junior class President Daniel Payne's exciting words at the Knighting ceremony on the first day of school. Daniel said, "I was trying to make the sophomores feel comfortable and pump some enthusiasm into the crowd."
2. "S-S-S-O-F-M-M-M-O-R; S-O-F-M-O-R, Sophomore, Sophomore, Sophomore." The sophomore council made their own class tradition in the Homecoming parade. "I think the bystanders were amused by our class' cheer and creative spelling," said Dorian Clowers(10).
3. The Sophomore class met in the cafeteria for their class office speeches. They were forced to make them in the cafeteria because of scheduling conflicts. Class treasurer Lauren Eubank(10) said, "It was a change making them in the cafeteria but it was something we had to do."
4. The senior council was lucky to have seniors as tall as Phil Heilig and Tyler McClellan around when they decorated for Homecoming. Phil said, "One of the best parts of the night before Homecoming was we all worked together and worked really hard."

Class Councils

Competition, spirit, and togetherness join three classes into one

S-S-Sen, J-J-Jun, S-S-Sof; the senior, junior, and sophomore class officers and councils spent Spirit Week trying to settle the debate on which class had the most spirit. Class rivalry was a yearly tradition. Senior council member Kristin Daniel(12) said, "There is a definite rivalry between classes like when the Seniors stand outside and make everyone "bow". Definitely some tension! But even though I think Spirit Week is supposed to be when classes bond together, I think that class rivalry will always be there." Dorian Clowers(10) agreed with Kristin, "There was a lot of rivalry but it brought us closer together as a class."

Sophomores, new to the tradition thought it was not a big deal. Kent Savoie(10) said, "It's dumb because we (the classes) are all the same." "It happens at every school," said Kristen Painter(10). With signs like, "Need a date, try a sophomore" some may think that Spirit week has gotten out of hand and brought the school further apart. Sara Chapman(12) disagreed, "It doesn't get out of hand. I think it adds to the whole week of overall fun."

At the end of the week, there were not three classes in the football stands but one. Andrea Taylor(11) said, "We had a healthy amount of rivalry but we really came out on Friday night as one to support the team."

The events that made the seasons unique could not have happened without the strengths of each individual in the student body. At the Mr. Miss Pageant, Ed Mitchell (12) dressed as 'Miss Behave', and took the crown. Having demonstrated leadership ability at the FBIA state conference, Monica Markwell (10) was recognized for her management skills. During the Valentine's Day fund raiser to support FCCA, Jesse Ellsworth (12) sold the most cakes and brownies. Matt Johnson (11), Aaron Dalton (12), and Josh Stowers (11) found an alternative way to raise money. The trio formed a group called the Gamma Club and played instruments downtown. The money tossed into open instrument cases was used to support the 'unemployed musicians'. In sports, Courtney Fitzpatrick (10) played both varsity volleyball and basketball, even though she was only a sophomore. Through the diverse opportunities available, students showed their individual skills and talents, by ourselves.

CONNECTING one by one

As individual students, the senior class was extremely diverse. From students being raised in Texas, to those who had lived in Roanoke all their lives, and others who were best friends or merely acquaintances, the Senior class of 2001 was unique. Jaime Fowlkes(12) and Ashley Scruggs(12) set out to connect, one by one the senior class. The students helped out the editors by filling out the senior survey, a list of questions about seniors' lives. But who could Jaime and Ashley select that would start and end the line? There were 382 different seniors to choose from, but they decided that the one thing that connected the class was the senior sponsors, Ms. Jeanne Dinkins and Mr. Peter Lustig.

Jaime and Ashley made an attempt to include every senior. Therefore, all of the seniors were connected to demonstrate not only the diversity but the "oneness" of the class of 2001.

As they visited Italy, Switzerland, France, and Spain, the students ate new foods, experienced new cultures, and met interesting people. John said his desire to go on the trip was, "because I had the time, money, and friends to go with. These aren't things people have when they are older, so I figured I better see the world now while I can." Both John and Clay described the favorite memory as ascending Mt. Every year on the first day of school a tradition takes place in the band hall. During the first assembly before the knight is revealed and Dr. Cobble makes the traditional speech, the band hall becomes a laugh-filled race track. Students sped down the hall at high speeds on wheeled chairs. "It is a ritual, every year on the first day of school we race chairs," said Jared Canfield(12). With everyone else worried about the new school year, Jared and others let their worries go and just had fun. The traditions and rituals often define a school, but chair racing was probably one of the bigger secrets of the Knighting Ceremony, obvious to only those that are doing the racing and the Knight as she prepares for the unveiling.

EIGHTEEN years coming

Finally, seniors celebrated adulthood with 18 candles and one of the biggest occasions of their lifetime. The young adults had mixed feelings about being truly adults, while for others, nothing really changed. "I think that once I'm at college and on my own, I'll feel a lot more responsible than I do now," said Katie Schrader(12).

Although the majority of seniors' lives did not change overnight, turning 18 brought on more responsibilities and more privileges. Seniors with birthdays before Election Day were able to vote, and the males had to register for the draft on their birthday. "[Voting] made me feel old, except the poll assistant had to help me, so everyone knew it was my first time," said Katie, who also bought a lottery ticket on her 18th birthday.

A surprise birthday party is always a welcome winter diversion. In November, friends surprised Debbie Crites(12) and Meagan Adams(12) with a shared birthday celebration. The seniors both turned 18 the first part of November. Debbie said, "I have great memories of us getting down and dirty playing Twister."

Parents changed rules at home, giving seniors more freedom, like Katie's new curfew. "People take you more seriously when you can say 'I'm 18'," said Katie. Whatever became of the seniors' lives when the candles were blown out, 18 was an important milestone for them.

STARTING over again

Adjusting to campus life can be even more nerve-racking than the college application process. Kristen Via(12), who is going to High Point University, loves the fact that she will have the opportunity to be "her own person" while living away from home.

"Being emotionally ready for college is a whole new ball game," said Leslie English(12). She continued, "You have to pick a college you know you'll feel at home in." Kristen said, "There is no earthly way to become a vet if I don't [go to college]!"

Beginning a new life can be challenging. Making a whole new set of friends, settling into a new dorm room and adjusting to a new found freedom can be stressful at best. But Kristen and Leslie are prepared to face the future.

High school lockers and heavy bookbags are one thing seniors are willing to leave behind. Adam Feldvay(12)refills his bookbag between classes. Students could not carry all of their books to each class.

While most students spent their summer vacations sleeping in, laying out, and generally doing anything they pleased, Elisha Gauley(12) spent some of her time helping out in the school office. Elisha came in during her vacation and helped the office staff prepare for the start of the school year by helping the other office workers collate teaching materials and student information. DATING

Would you go blindly?

Katie Westermann

Posing for a picture for an issue of the KnightLetter two seniors maintain their anonymity. They posed with paper bags covering their heads because they wanted to demonstrate the uncertainties that revolve around blind dating.

"I wouldn't go on [a blind date] simply because I'd like to know the person before going somewhere with them. I'd like to meet the person and talk with them if only for five minutes before even considering doing something with them."

Ryan Daly(12)

"I would probably go on a blind date as long as I knew a little bit about the person and my friends were the ones who set me up with him. That way I would know he's probably not a psycho."

Riley Stevenson(12)

"It would depend on which of my friends were setting me up, but unless I really trusted the person, probably not."

Taking a break in front of the office from decorating the senior halls for Red and Black Day, Kelley Morrison(12) gives Carrisa Hensley(12) a ride. Spirit Week was viewed as a fun week for many seniors who took advantage of their last Homecoming week at the school. "I had the most fun I've had out of any year...it was fueled by a lot of motivated people," said Carrisa. Thursday night, the day before Red and Black day, seniors stayed as late as 11:30 with senior sponsor Peter Lustig to decorate the halls for Homecoming. On Friday morning students made their way into glitter covered hallways with streamers hanging from the ceiling and hand printed posters covering the floors. Spirit Week consisted of students taking advantage of being able to dress up for days such as Hillbilly Day, Hip Hop Day, and Hawaiian Day. During Homecoming week being a senior was an important fact to many upperclassmen including Carrisa and Kelley. "[Being a senior] means being school spirited and taking advantage of the fact that you are on top of the class," said Carrisa.

EXEMPTIONS affect seniors

A group discussion concerning exam exemptions alleviates some of the tension for seniors. Dr. Linda Weber, superintendent answered questions about the new exemption policy that was put into place during the third nine weeks.

Forced to give up yet another privilege, seniors had to accept exemptions only for the fourth nine weeks test.

In the past, seniors were excused from second semester exams in year long classes if they had five or fewer absences and at least a B average. With the new system, exams were changed to nine weeks tests. It was decided, to the disapproval of a number of seniors, that students would be exempted from only the fourth nine weeks test. Senior Sonnet Wright said, "They are cheating seniors who were expecting exemptions for the whole second semester." Others didn't seem to mind. "I don't really care one way or the other. They seem to count less this way, which is nice, but it doesn't make a difference," said Scott Stancil(12).

For the most part, third nine weeks testing was frustrating for seniors because they knew they wouldn't be exempted. Sonnet said, "I didn't study for the nine weeks tests because not only did I not know what was going on, but my teachers didn't seem to know either." The nine weeks testing might not have been permanent, but until a new system was made, seniors had to deal with the change.

LEAVING pets behind

Leaving their homes, their friends, and their families was difficult for college-bound seniors, but there was something else they had to leave behind – their pets. Those who have ever had a family dog or cat know that even a pet can become an indispensable part of the family. "I will be sad to leave my dog, Sugar," said Josh Hailey(12).

Some people, like Josh, have had a pet around since elementary school. In his case, it was a dog. Josh first got Sugar when he was in the fifth grade. "[When I got her], I ran into the house making a lot of noise. I was excited to finally have a dog," he said. Josh had a lot of memories with Sugar. When he was younger, he played soccer with Sugar in his backyard.

Though Josh had to leave Sugar with his family, some people had other solutions. Brad Powell(12) said, "I won't have to [leave my pet], a guinea pig is small enough to hide in a dorm room."

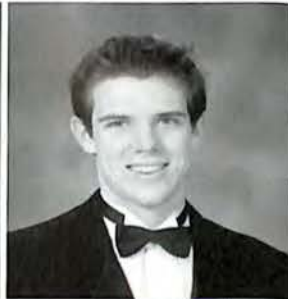

Alex Poetek(12) cuddles with her German Shepherd, Remik, who she received as a Christmas present three years ago. As a loved member of the family, Remik even slept in a bed with Alex. "I'll have to come home to see him," she said.

Balancing high up on a ladder, Catherine Anderson(12) hung up snowflakes and other winter decorations in the front lobby. As an art club member, she and other members decorated in preparation for the winter to come. Catherine said, "We spent about two months making all the decorations to decorate the lobby with." In addition to the decorations in the school for the winter holidays, students in the art club also painted colorful snowmen murals on the windows at the Arby's on Brambleton before Winter break. The art club dedicated much of their time to making the school look appealing to the people that had to go there every day, making it a little more enjoyable. The talents of the students in Art Club could be found all over the school during the year.

Performing community service through Beta Club, Jaime Fowlkes (12) participated at the Phone-A-Thon at the Roanoke County Administration Office. Jaime said, "It was a lot of fun, and I am glad that we were able to raise additional money for the Foundation." Jaime was able to raise $300 for the Roanoke County Education Foundation. Each year, all the schools in Roanoke County compete against each other to raise the most money. Beta Club does many other community service projects throughout the year.

Compliments of Cathy Winger

Celebrating Christmas, a close knit group of senior girls get together. They met a week before Christmas to exchange their final secret Santa gifts and to reveal who was behind the gift giving.

BONDS of friendship

Who would have thought that in 10 short months individuals could form friendship bonds that would be cherished forever? The senior year for newly formed friendships was full of memories, both funny and sad.

As the year ended, seniors realized that they took for granted the easiness of being a phone call or an instant message away. And in conversations, they shared their feelings about the friendships and the good times that could never be relived. As the class looked back, they thanked their reliable friends who had held their hands and laughed at their bad jokes.

Even as seniors moved on to universities, the friendships with the strongest connections would not need to be linked by correspondence, for in life the paths would cross again.

Lifting weights at the Roanoke Athletic Club proved to be an important release for Robbie Neil(12) after a hectic or frustrating day of school. "I lift because it makes me feel good," Robbie said. "Whenever I lift, I'm in my own little world. I zone everything else out except my weights. It's great." Robbie was known to spend an average of three hours a day working out at the RAC. Many seniors could also be found working out at the RAC, CAC, YMCA, or New Fitness for Women. For Robbie, exercise was a crucial daily activity that made his mind and body feel better.

EARNING the gold

Accepting baseball scholarships, Eric Jones(12) and Tyler Lumsden(12) answer questions by the press. Eric said, "I didn't realize how big it was going to be until I was sitting there with all the reporters. It was an exciting experience."

Michelle Davis

How would you feel about leaving for college without worrying about finances? Last year, two students accepted four-year scholarships; however, this year ten students received them. Bill Meador(12) was one of the ten. An outstanding track and cross country athlete, he will be attending James Madison University on a partial scholarship. His scholarship also included added incentives that will grow each year as his track times improve.

Talented athletes have increased their dedication due to the possibilities and advantages that scholarships offer. Bill said, "I didn't always want a scholarship; but as soon as I discovered my talent, I set higher goals to achieve."

Eric Jones(12) said, "...[my scholarship] gave me a lot of relief. I don't have the stress of choosing which college to attend." Because they placed emphasis and effort towards their sport, this year's athletes will be able to improve their futures.

Physics teacher Ms. Kelley dared to come up with a new experiment to utilize and explain the basic laws of physics. The students were instructed to build a catapult utilizing a list of various materials. They were required to launch a large marshmallow a minimum of 3 meters and then hit a 2 foot tower, knocking the tower over. Tyler McLellan(12) was playing with the marshmallows as the class finished their trial runs. Tyler said, "It was fun trying to build the catapult, but when it counted the most I missed the target. [I learned] if you pull back too far the marshmallow will smash against the back wall." Originally used during times of war to launch bombs and weapons over walls, Ms. Kelley and her classes reinvented the device to provide a hands-on learning experience.

Cheering for their team, senior cheerleaders showed their passion for the sport of basketball. Seniors on the Varsity Basketball squad were Erin Culpepper, Courtney Ellers, Erika Bailey, Christin Lovelace, Courtney Scherer, Sara Chapman, Rebecca Kopstein, Katherine Garrett, and Amy Rooney. "I'm close with my teammates. It's cool how you didn't know each other and became great friends once the season started," said Amy Rooney. "We all bond in practice because we are together... 5 days a week for two hours." Supporting their school and each other was important to the girls. Sara said, "With as much time as we spend together, friendships can't help but be formed."

SMILES for the judges

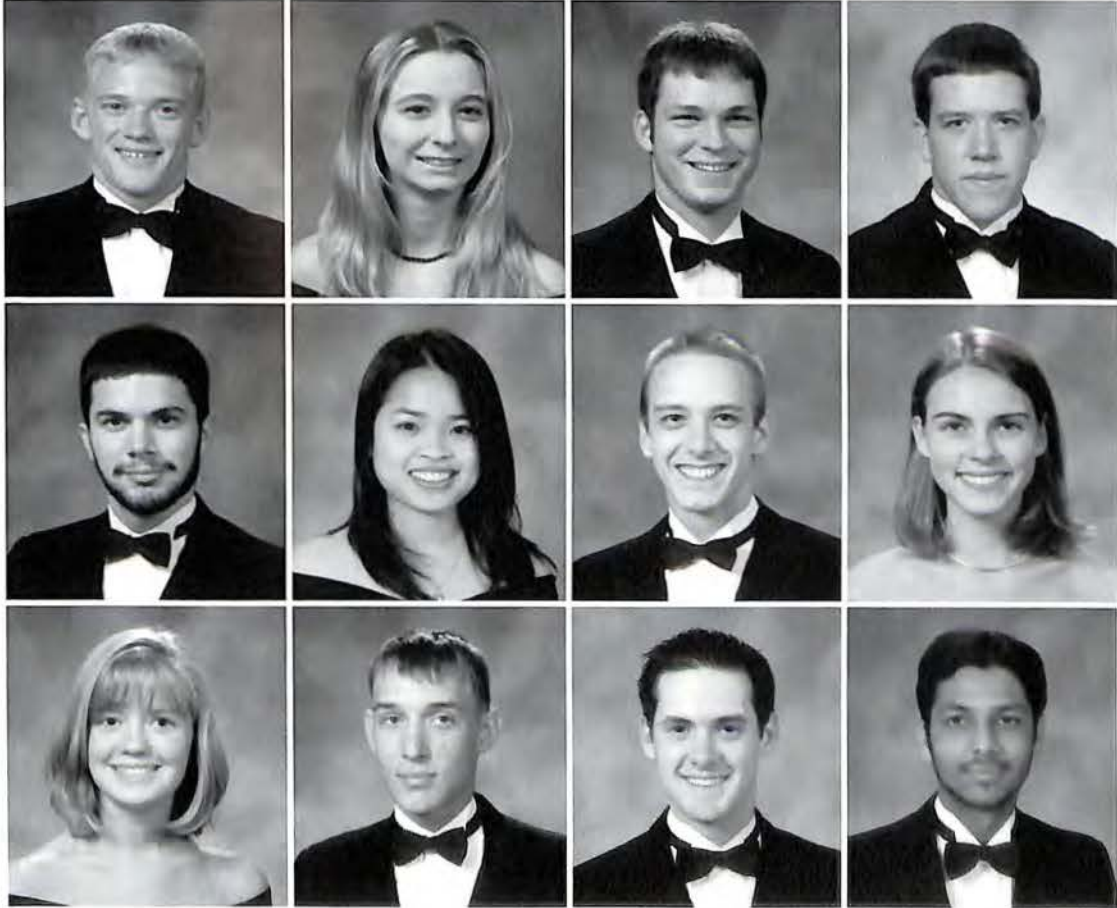

During the talent portion of the Junior Miss Program, Allison Doughty(12) performs a monologue from "The King and I". The participants each had ninety seconds to perform their talents. Allison said, "I had never had any acting experience, but I really got into this monologue."

Expensive dresses, jealous contestants, and large cash prizes are common stereotypes of beauty pageants. However, Virginia's Junior Miss Scholarship program is no "Miss Congeniality". "A lot of people think this is a beauty pageant with big hair and lots of makeup where we all hated the other contestants. It was the total opposite," said Allison Doughty(12). The contestants were judged in many areas, including academics, and did not have a swimsuit competition.

Allison was one of eighteen girls selected from local programs across Virginia to compete in a statewide competition. The girls lived with host families for a week, while rehearsing all day long for the final competition. "I'm glad this program brings together girls that are active and leaders in their schools," said Allison.

Although Junior Miss was a scholarship competition, the girls involved got more out of the experience than money for college. Allison said, "This was my best experience in high school. I didn't win any scholarships, but I will treasure this experience for the rest of my life."

SKIPPED the classes

Seniors unofficially declared the day off Friday, April 13th. Skip day has been part of high school tradition long before the graduating class of 2001 came through, although not every senior was able to participate. Kirk Grubbs (12) was able to leave early on Friday because he usually left at noon, but because his mother was attendance secretary, he was not able to take the whole day off.

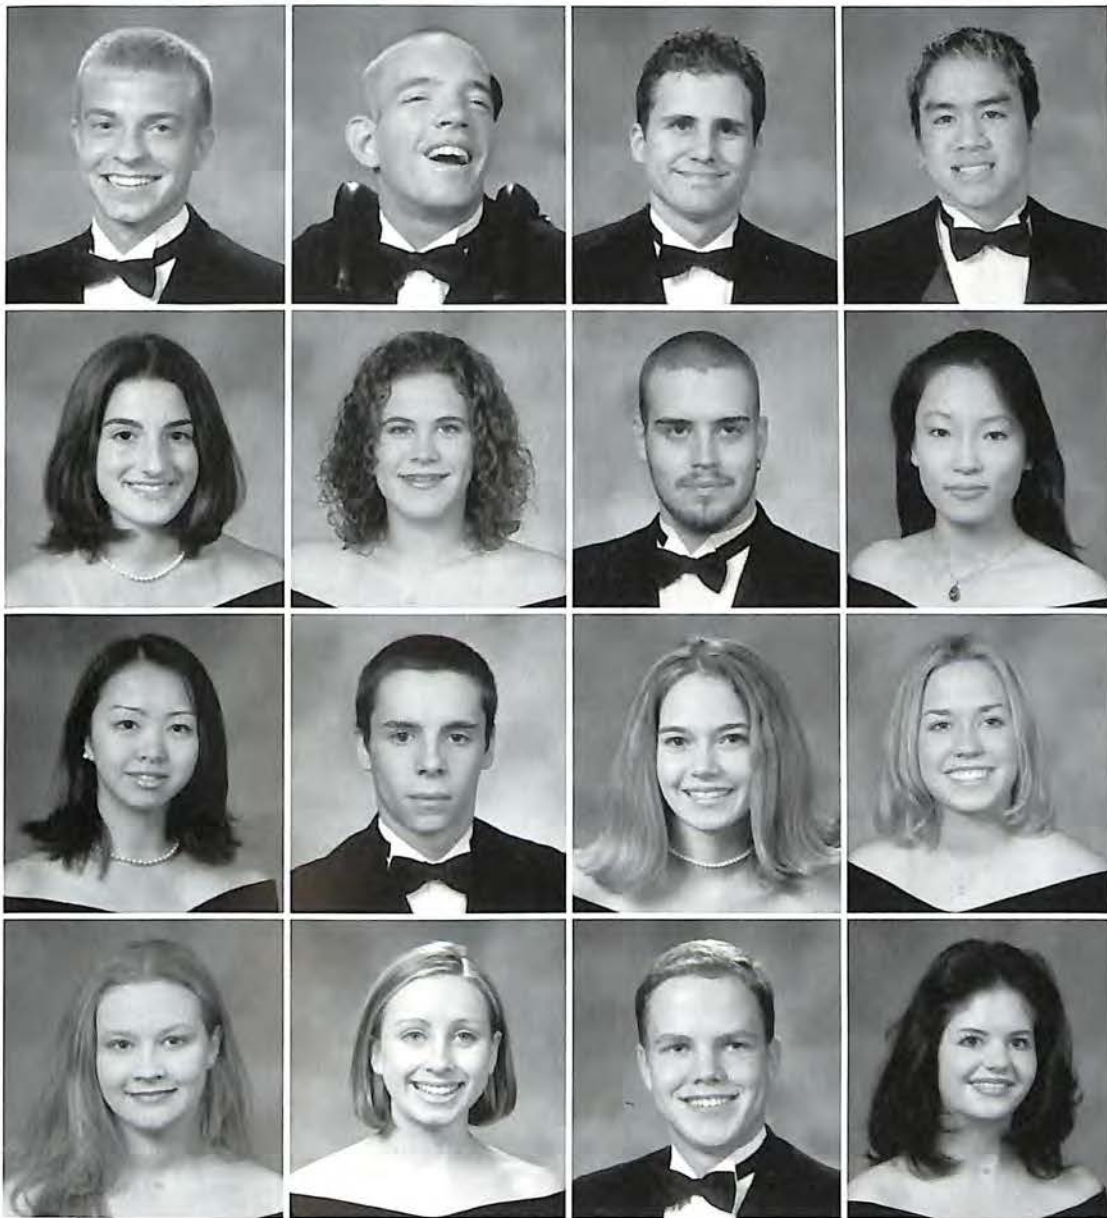

The day after skip day was worst for attendance secretary Ms. Beth Grubbs. she said, "It's just awful because there are so many students needing to check in." She estimated about 100 students skipped the day; most returned with note. The majority of notes claim that students were sick. "It's amazing how many kids had surgery," said Ms. Grubbs.

Because so many students were signing in after senior skip day, the attendance table was located in the lobby. Brandon Robertson(12) gave his excuse to Ms. Beth Grubbs to get his admit slip.

As Matt Hancock(12), Shirlee Ann Cox(12), Maureen Peck(12), and Andrew Artusio(12) left school, they were once again taking notice in the unusually warm weather that had occurred. "It [was] the time of year that you [would] make your final trip to Snowshoe," said Andrew. But this doesn't mean the end of fun according to Andrew. "There are plenty of things to do now that warm weather [had] finally reached the Roanoke Valley," Andrew said.

GRADUATION Who's Worried?

They finally made it to graduation, but before that final trek across the stage in front of all their family and friends...

What were you most worried about during the actual graduation ceremony?

"The worst thing that could happen at graduation would be to trip and fall on the stairs or stage when my name is called to receive my diploma...everyone would see it."

Sarah Peters(12)

"...to write out my speech and forget and forget to bring it upon stage."

Jason Owenby(12)

"...when they call you up to the stage and no one claps or cheers for you."

Jason Ronquillo(12)

"...that the bubbles that we are carrying in our bras leak before we walk across the stage."

Students in Mrs. D'Alessandro's class were assigned to create a restaurant logo to turn in as a grade. "This was an exciting class. I really liked the different medias we got to work with," Taryn said. In addition to taking an art class at school, Taryn indulged her creativity as often as she could. "[I painted or drew] just about everyday, even week-ends," she said. For Taryn, art was a way to relax. Students relaxed with classes such as AP Studio Art, Sculpture, Art Foundations, and Independent Study. Art students helped to decorate the school in places such as the lobby, library, and cafeteria.

Seniors tried out for the different events at graduation. For all students, being able to represent their class either at the Civic Center, the baccalaureate, or at the senior assembly was a year long dream. Robbie Lalka(12), who was selected to deliver the invocation at the baccalaureate program, competed against his peers for the honor. The auditions were performed in the library. Each individual was judged and selected by a committee made up of community members. Lauren Steele(12), Emily Kelley(12), Kayt Spragg(12), Heather Bales(12), and Lindsey Elkins(12) were selected to perform the songs for the program.

SENIORITIS slacking off

Waiting in the Library, Patricia Bidanset(12) scans the shelves for something to do. After her car was hit, she had to wait in the library every day until 2:10. Privileged seniors took study halls in order to get out early avoiding the after school rush.

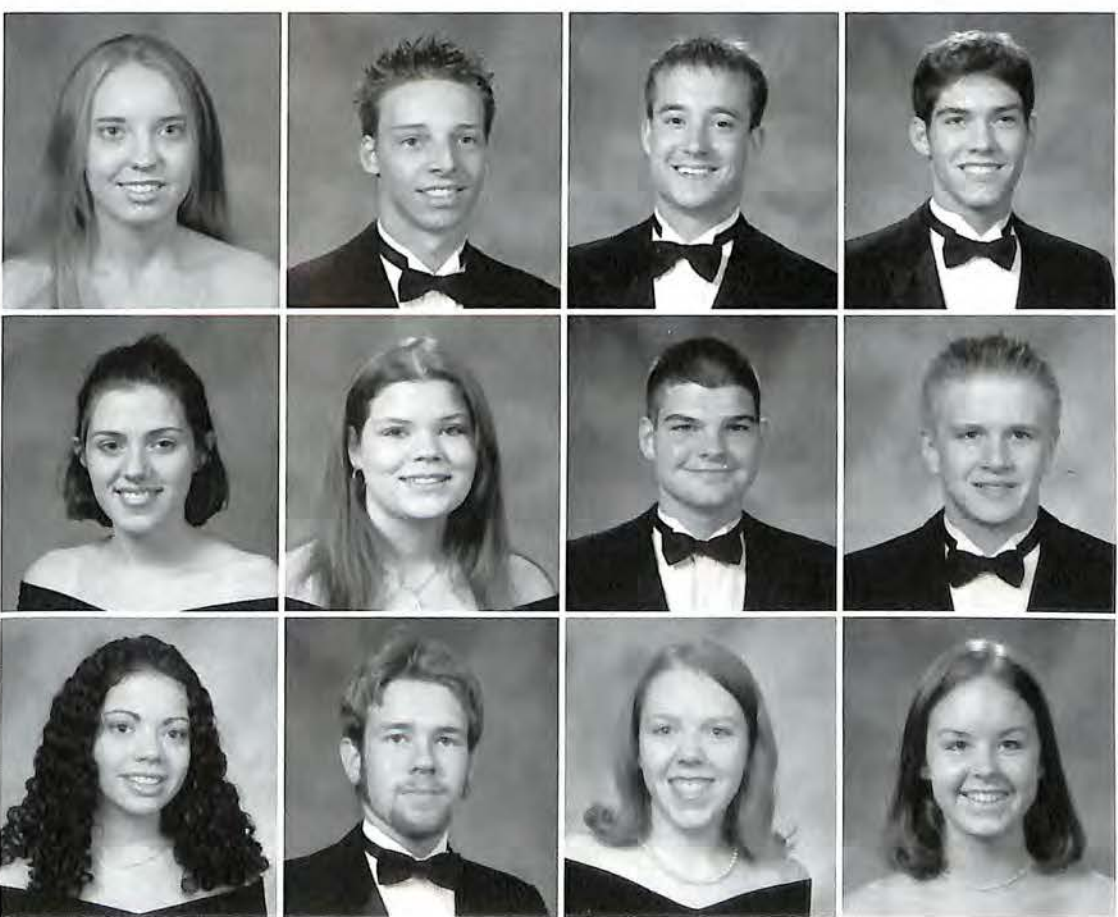

Danielle Witt

Senioritis is "Eight study halls, home room, and a zero period," said Phil Deneka(12). Senioritis was the chronic slacking after seniors were accepted to college. About every senior was affected. After acceptance letters came from colleges nothing mattered except graduation. Students searched to find ways to help them keep their spirits up. Eric Lemmer(12) said, "[I]counted down the number of days left..." in order to keep going.

"Senioritis is a privilege. Seniors have earned the right to slack off some and not have to care as much about school their second semesters," said Eric. Without exam exemption to motivate seniors seemed to slack off more.

The class focused the first half of the year trying to maintain enough interest in school to get to graduation. However, with no motivation, few consequences, and that vital letter of acceptance, the senioritis epidemic spread rapidly during second semester.

KINDERGARTEN to college

Compliments of Tanya Sinha

Smiling for the camera, Kristin Smith(12), Tanya Sinha(12), and Tara Lynch(12) gather together for one of their parties. The girls went to school together from preschool until fifth grade. Although they were separated between the two junior highs, the friendship continued throughout high school.

Friendships form and dissolve through the years, but some bonds lasted from kindergarten to college. Katie Westermann(12) and Trey Watkins(12) moved in across the street from one another before their kindergarten year. "Katie was my first friend in Roanoke," Trey said.

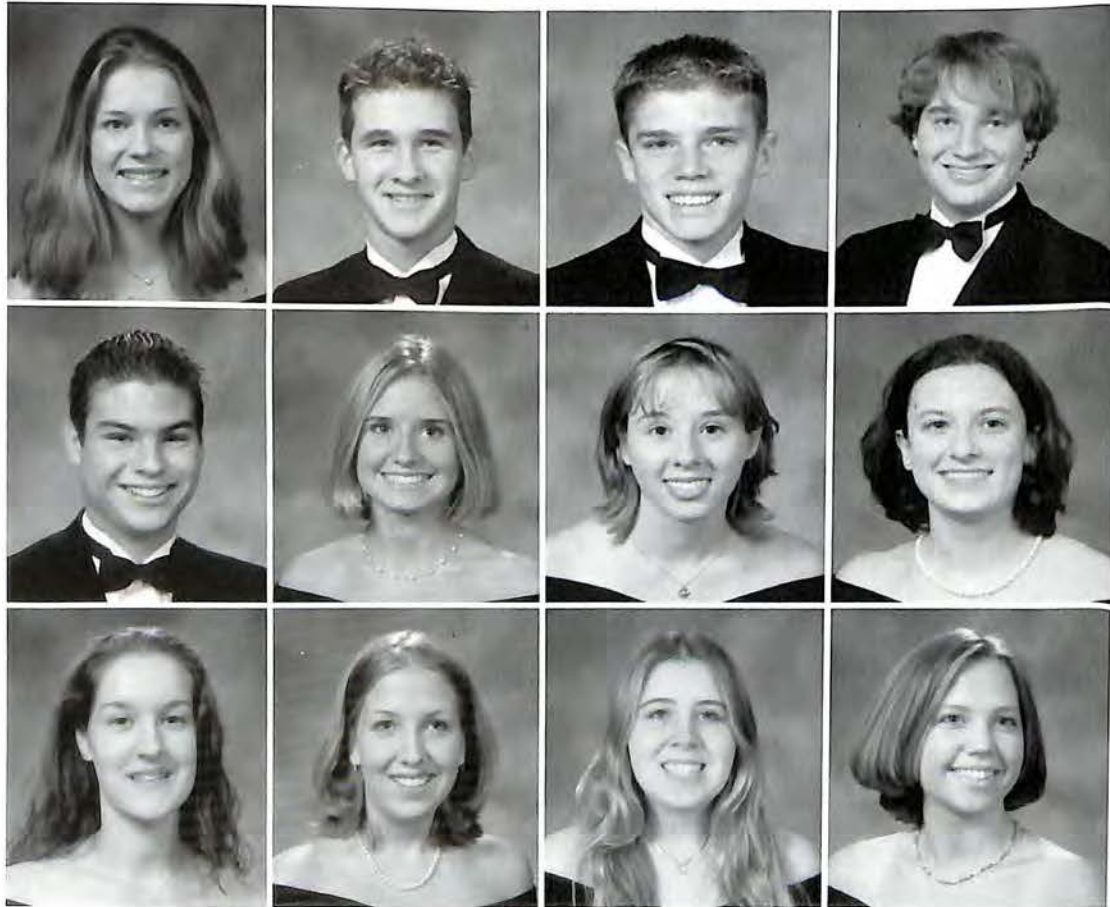

Leaving the familiarity of long friendships was difficult. Trey headed to Clemson University and Katie moved on to Wittenburg University in Ohio. "It is going to be weird not being able to just run across the street when I want to talk to Trey," Katie said. "Since we grew up together, Trey has been like my brother. We've played in the snow, we've gone to Homecoming together, we've done it all."

Despite their separation, they said that long distance would not stifle their longtime frie two had already traded e-mail addresses and phone numbers and felt sure that they would stay in touch. "I'm looking forward to college, but I'll miss Trey a whole lot," Katie said.

"I went for the dress with the biggest skirt because I like the princess look. I found out I could hardly walk much less dance in that poof of a skirt," Michelle said. "Needless to say I ended up buying a bright red dress in Greensboro." Since spring break fell the month before Prom, senior girls took advantage of the break to go dress shopping in other cities like Greensboro, Washington D.C., and Richmond. Others chose to shop locally at department and specialty stores in town.

Traditionally, girls wore white dress to their senior Prom, however many girls instead chose dress in a variety of colors and styles.

The senior class was called to the auditorium on a Thursday morning before school ended to collect their caps and gowns. Amidst the chaos, Brandy Shumate(12) found her homeroom and her order. Students, for the first time, were able to see the much anticipated caps, gowns, tassels, announcement, and 2001 souvenirs.

The graduation ceremony was held at the Roanoke Civic Center, but surprising to all the facility was reserved for a Saturday night. In past years, the actual ceremony was held later in the week and earlier in the evening, but not on the weekend. "I didn't like that graduation was so late because I had to wait almost a week between the last day of school and graduation," said Brandy. The 7:30 ceremony was a later time than previous years.

Waiting to dominate sophomores, Lauren Smith (12) and Kristen Smith (12) stand under the homecoming "Bow Down" Sign. Seniors were welcomed, while sophomores were condemned to kneeling to get into the lobby. However, some sophomores found ways to avoid the embarrassment.

Seniority is defined as the state or status of being senior. The senior class, as a result of being the oldest in the hallways, acknowledged that they had the power. From the prominent homecoming parade float, through the elaborately decorated hallways at spirit week, to the senior cap and gown assemblies, seniors had privileges. But seniors wanted more. "I think seniors should have a room where they can go and just hang out during study hall and before and after school..." said Natalie Bartgis(12).

To add to their status, seniors had privileges which pertained only to them, such as 'senior' parking which was in the actual parking lot instead of across the street, and the 'senior' bell that let them out of class early. Seniors agreed on one thing: underclassmen should not be allowed to participate in senior privileges. "Seniors should have at least one privilege that no one else has. The senior bell at the end of the day is only supposed to be for seniors, but I see underclassmen leaving all the time!" said Riley Stevenson (12).

Trends off the runway

Are you a trendsetter or a trend follower? That question may be difficult for students to answer, but not for Sidney Poole(10). "Do you want me to be honest?" Sidney asked when asked what her most unique piece of clothing was. "[It is] probably the jeans I'm wearing right now," she said, referring to her jeans ripped on the side with shoelaces laced through the seams.

Sidney made her style unique by wearing "...anything funky and loud." However, she also enjoyed relaxing by wearing her personal favorite outfit; a pair of comfortable jeans and a Scooby Doo T-shirt. Sidney said it only took her about a half-hour to get ready in the morning, contrary to the belief that a fashion statement takes hours to create.

Sidney wore something different almost every day. "I like to add my own spice to [my clothes]." Sidney said, "I see things in magazines and add my own touch." Whether she altered or bought an outfit, Sidney made sure that she stood out in the hallways.

Through the Halls

Between bustling bodies and socializing friends, Erin Moore(10) struggled to get class, her locker, or just down the hall. She said, "The hallways were very compacted between classes. Everyone felt tension as the bell rang and you began to proceed through the halls... The halls can [also] become frustrating."

Socializing in the hall was difficult and if students chose to chat, they would be late for class. Stephanie Spencer(11) said, "I felt there was not a social aspect between classes anymore." Besides students, the hallways are full of book bags, llama poop, perfume, and kissing couples.

"I did have a non-understanding teacher to the matter of the crowded hallways," Erin said. Few teachers had to maneuver through the halls as students did, so some were less flexible about tardiness. Some teachers, however, were more forgiving than others.

As the year progressed, students became more accustomed to the hallways. Erin said, "People discovered that walking outside and around the school created more time and less frustration."

BY Jennifer Peters

Michelle Davis

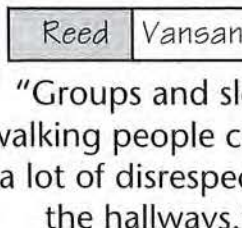

As Dr. Martha Cobble and Mrs. Paula Seamon answer questions, students find that there is little space in the hallways or office for chatting. "After the class when the bell rings, the halls are nothing but a mess," said Justin Kern(11). "...I should have time to leave class, go to my locker, and still get to class on time, but most of the time that is not the case."

WHAT ARE YOU THINKING WHEN YOU WALK THROUGH THE HALLWAYS?

Ann Mallin(11)

"I think that it's a good way to get up close and personal with that certain someone."

Reed Vansandt(11)

"Groups and slow walking people create a lot of disrespect in the hallways."

Yuki Kumazaw(11)

"We need a bigger school!"

Could you make it through the hallways?

For each question, rate yourself 1, 2, or 3, 3 being most like your attitude and 1 being the least like your attitude in the hallways.

1. Do you push through couples as you parade through the hallways?
2. As you run through the halls, does Coach Matthews stop you and ask you to join the track team?
3. Do you find yourself yelling or making crude remarks to people in the annex?
4. Do you rush past your friends even if they have the latest gossip?

12-10 points

Congrats! You would definitely be on time to class with extra time.

9-6 points

You are a medium paced person that finds time to socialize.

5-3 points

You are a slow moving person that tends to get pushed around.

To the average student, the marching band kids might have been alienating from the outside world. These students spent their mornings in their own "band world" grooving to the jazz band's version of the "Bunny Hop." They hung around the band room so long after school that the directors threatened to lock them inside. It seemed that band kids spent so much time together that they were like a family; however, Karla Hoffman(11) had her own opinion. She said, "[Band] is a cult!"

Students involved agreed that the atmosphere in marching band was different from that of the school. "My band friends act more silly and don't always concentrate on popularity," said Erica. While some students would object to practicing three days a week and giving up Friday nights to play at football games, these musicians didn't mind. "It's a blast. Especially playing in the stands because we make up cheers and things," Karla said.

Call it a cult or a family, the marching band members were close. As Erica said, "...although marching band only lasts a few months, the memories last forever."

Diana Roth

Knowing they had a long day ahead, Adam Feldvary(12) and Brittany Vascik(10) seized an opportunity to catch some zzz's on the bus ride to the marching band festival. The long ride to Pulaski was an opportunity for the band students to bond. Brittany said, "...we are a family, you can always find someone to talk to."

"School should start earlier...and end at 4:00, [so] homework will not be needed."

"Make school optional so the people who don't want to learn anyway, won't have to."

"We should have a mandatory singing time to wake everyone up."

WHAT DO YOU THINK SHOULD BE DONE ABOUT STUDENTS BEING SO TIRED DURING CLASSES?

Droopy eyes and yawns were just a few of the all too common signs of drowsiness. Everyone has been tired before, and it was common knowledge that sleeping through the school day was not the best way to obtain good grades. Why were so many students napping while at school?

Brittany Vascik(10) said that she came close to dozing off about twice a week. In addition to taking challenging classes, she did not get home from her extracurricular commitments until around 7:45, when she would begin several hours of homework. "At times I [felt] overwhelmed and stressed out," Brittany said.

Sleep deficit due to late bedtimes and early mornings left many students worn-out and unprepared for the day to come. Michael Russo(10) suggested a 10 minute nap break after lunch, while Letisha Beachy(11) said, "Hours at school should be less or homework hours less at night." In the end, exhausted students had to find their own solutions to stay awake in class.

Dana Roth

"Sleeping in a desk is a lot more comfortable than you would think," said Davey Arthur(11). He often took a break from homeroom by catching a couple zzz's. Students often napped in class because they were tired, but Davey was just bored. "I was dreaming about this certain 'chick' I know," he said.

PRIORITIES

Striving toward goals

"I'm a lot more concerned about getting into the college I want so I'm really focused on my grades and getting involved in school activities," said Kathy Beury(11). She, like many juniors, had undergone a transformation from her sophomore year. Suddenly, the fears about adjusting to high school had faded away, and were replaced with the increased anxiety over getting into college or joining the work force. Kathy became involved in nearly twice as many after school activities and took more difficult classes such as AP history.

Guidance counselors stressed to juniors the importance of raising their grades before applying to college. Juniors spent less time socializing and more time studying. Garrett English(11) said, "[My] junior year [was] extremely difficult, and I have to set my priorities much higher in order to achieve the goals I have set for myself."

Although a few students waited until their senior year, there was also a priority placed on taking the crucial SAT tests. Kathy said, "[I am] afraid of the college's opinion [of my SAT scores] even if my grades are good." Juniors came to realize the harsh reality of the importance placed on grades and activities. Suddenly, high school went from a new experience to a year of changing priorities as graduation approached.

Michelle Davis

Looking toward the future, Jason Cruff(11) sketches the front of the school in basic technical drawing. He enrolled in this class in order to strengthen his technical skills. A year before graduation, Jason was already making sacrifices in preparation for college. He said, "I am fascinated in industrial processes and how engineers and drafters use standardizing drawing to build a precise part."

HOW HAVE YOUR PRIORITIES CHANGED FROM SOPHOMORE YEAR?

Melanie Kinney(11)

"I'm [not] the naive, impressionable sophomore I was... However, [grades] have not become my main obsessive focus in life."

Emily Seamon(11)

"I now actually care how I do in my classes. My grades really do matter now."

Jord Wilkinson(11)

ANSWERS: A. 3 B. 1 C. 2

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF BODY ART?

"Body art can look good as long as it is not overdone."

"I think body art is gross because it takes away from your appearance."

"I think that body art is supah-sexy form of self-expression"

Belly button rings, eyebrows pierced, tongues decorated, teens pierced themselves as an expression of individuality. Carrey Wagoner(10) and Alana Fuller(10) pierced their belly buttons. "I think that it's a form of expression," Carrey said. "I've just always wanted it... to be different." In agreement, Alana said, "I think it's a reflection of someone's personality."

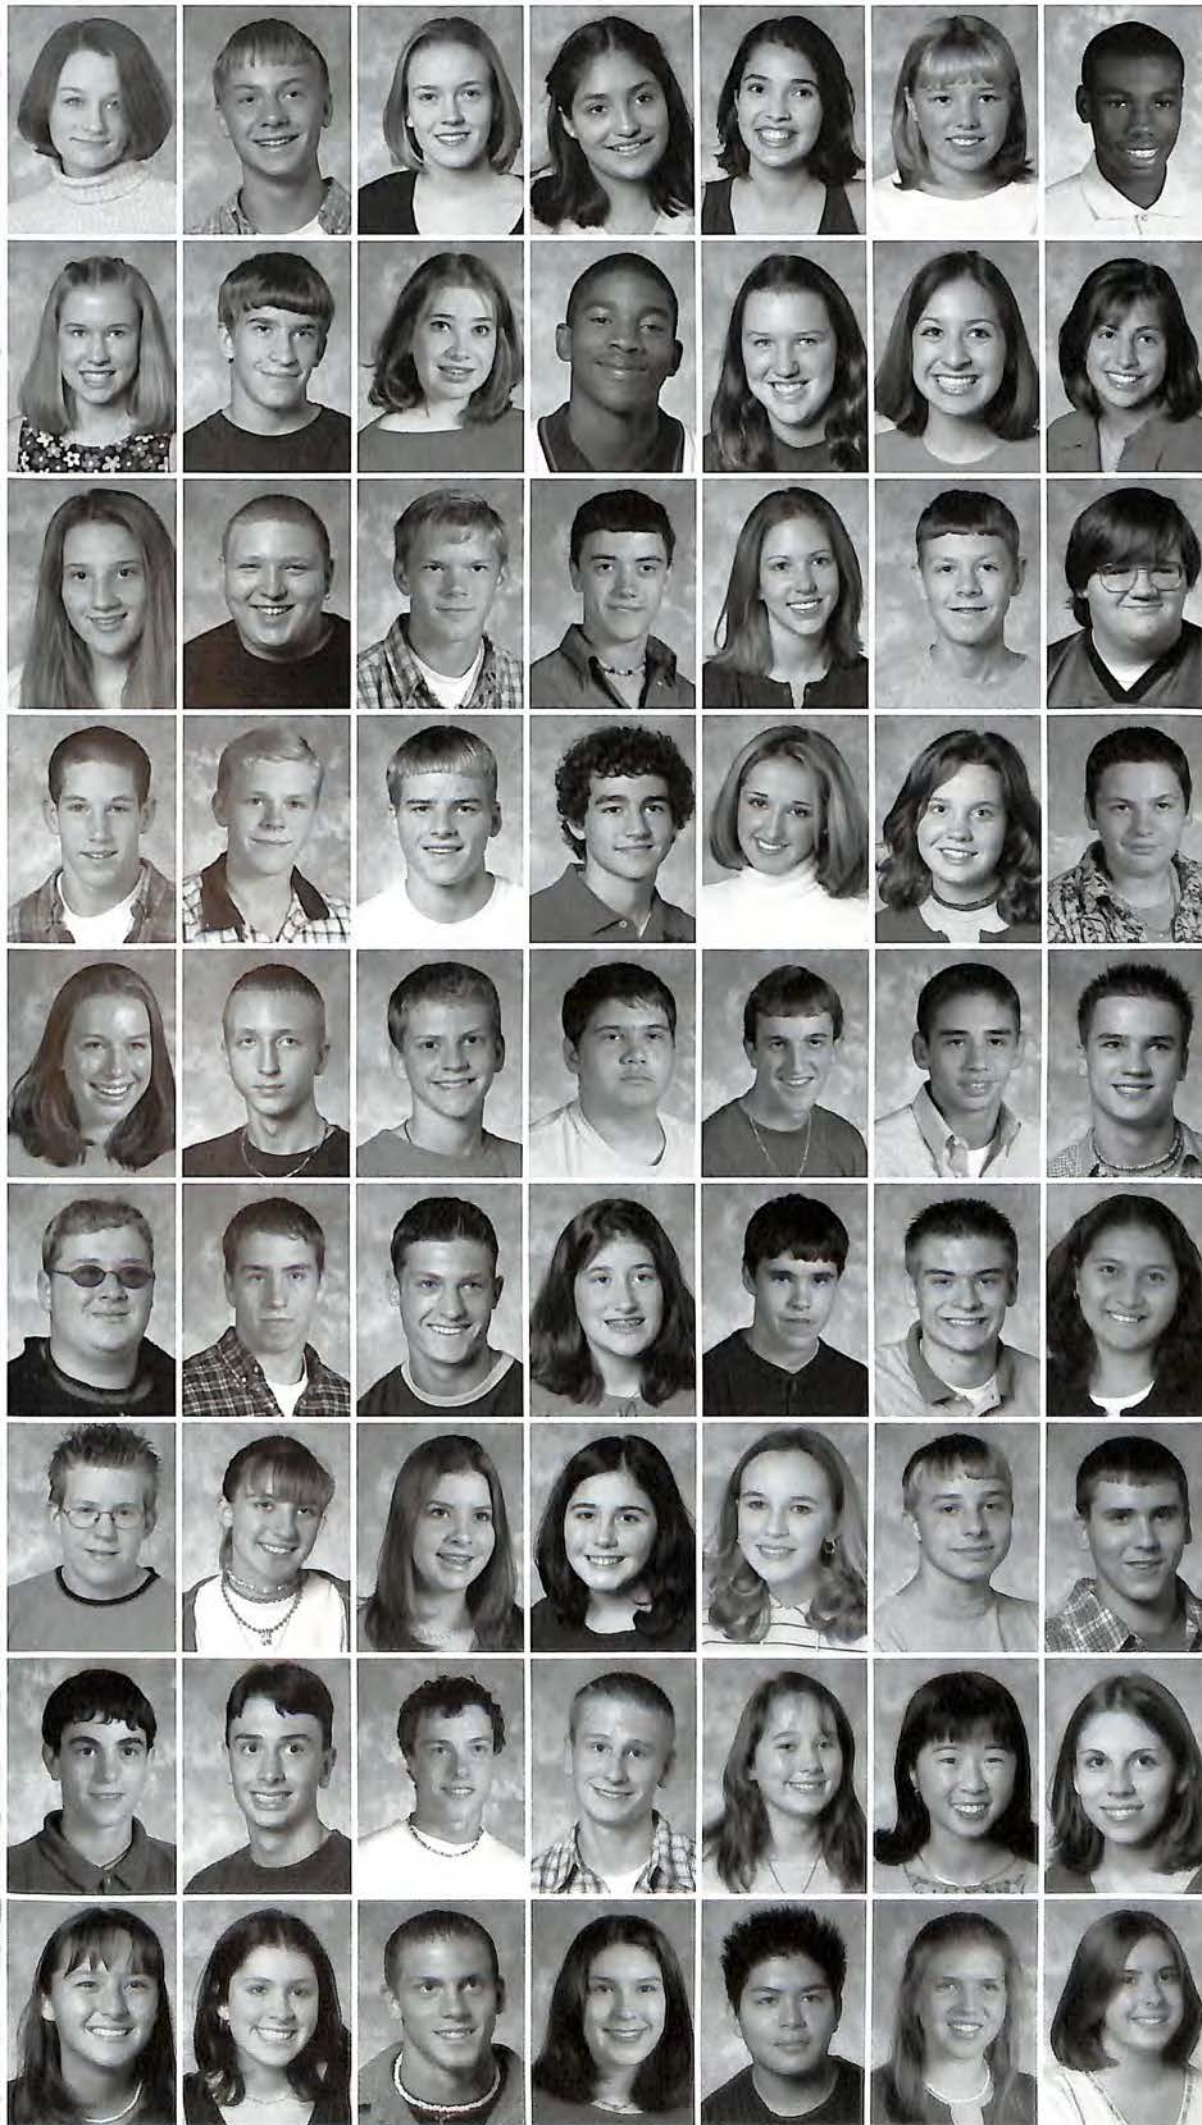

Students ornamented their bodies with tattoos and piercings, but why exactly did they pierce and tattoo themselves? Students felt that it was a form of expression, that individuals did it just to be different and to stand out from the crowd. Carrey thought teenage rebellion was the reason. "Some [people] do it to go against their parents," she said. Alana thought they did it because, "...it's popular and sexy."

However, students think body art is just a trend. Ellie Augustine(10) said, "It's just a trend [because] people haven't really been wearing belly rings, it just popped up." Whether people do it because they like it or just because their parents don't, students seemed to agree that body art was a trend.

Showing off her shiny silver eyebrow ring Lesley Gastineau(10) expresses her individual style while she sits at lunch. She got her eyebrow pierced earlier this year as a birthday present from her mom. "I love my piercing and I would definitely get something else pierced," she said.

WHAT WERE YOUR FIRST THOUGHTS OF ROANOKE ONCE YOU ARRIVED? FROM WHERE DID YOU MOVE?

Escaping from the violence of a foreign land, Gerard Kasza (10) and his family fled to the United States five years ago. "I lived in South Africa for eight years and then I moved to Scotland for two and a half," he said, explaining how his family had to get away from the violence in South Africa. Gerard arrived in Roanoke in elementary school after his father received a job here.

Communication was Gerard's greatest obstacle upon his arrival. "I didn't understand what people were talking about... [especially] slang. I had an accent that many people didn't understand." School was also a change for him. "I went to private schools in Scotland and South Africa. There was a lot more expected of you, plus school was harder."

Gerard's appetite also changed as a result of living in the United States. "In South Africa, a 'cook sister', which is a dough with a special type of sweet syrup on it, was my favorite food. Here in Roanoke my favorite food is ribs." Despite these adjustments, Gerard found Roanoke to be a nice place to live.

Lounging in the library, Gerard Kasza (10) continues with his ever present school work. His quick adjustment to school was one of the many accomplishments that allowed Gerard to find his place in Roanoke. Gerard became even more a part of the school by his participation in several clubs and being a member of the Cave Spring golf team.

BEGINNINGS

STRESS STRESS STRESS STRESS STRESS

How do you deal?

"Mashed potatoes are really good!" exclaimed sophomore Mary Ellen Apgar(10), who had to have her mouth wired shut before school started. Being a sophomore in a new school was made even harder for Mary because people couldn't understand what she was saying. This, added to the stress of being in a new school with over 1,000 new students, was overwhelming.

Mary had a hard time making conversation, so her best friend, Erin Sowder(10) would say everything for her. "She was like my translator," Mary explained. To relieve the stress, she went for car rides and let the wind blow on her face. "I also tried to yell but nothing came out," Mary added. Finding the artist within her, Mary flicked paint on the walls of her art room and even sang to make herself more relaxed.

She said that school was the worst type of stressor because it was the kind that was going to affect the rest of her life: grades, college, and a job would all be similar causes of stress in the future. "Don't procrastinate and try to be nice to people," Mary said, and try to get along with your parent even if it kills you..."

Angela Griffin

Blowing off stress, Mary Delaney(10) finds ways to express her musical talent. Dealing with stress was a daily routine for students and each dealt with it differently. "I draw on my pants and eat a whole lotta food," Mary said.

Language Barriers

Imagine going to a new country and starting over in a foreign high school. Danijela Coric (11), a German exchange student, had to do just that. She said "I think I would be treated differently if I spoke English better."

Although adapting to a new life was hard, Danijela made several new friends. She enjoyed going to movies and bowling on the weekend. Academically, Danijela strived to keep up with her schoolwork. She said she got the same assignments her peers received, which was more challenging without an American background. Danijela loved her English-as-a-second-language class though. She said she got to meet "lots of students from other countries".

Not everybody thought they could handle living abroad. Julie Lawrence (10) said "I would miss freedom of speech." John Paul Branisteanu (10) said he would miss "the hot girls." Even though adjusting to communication difficulties has been hard for Danijela, she said "I think I have adjusted well."

"I think students and teachers have started to be nicer to me," Danijela Coric (11) said. As she studied for one of her classes, Danijela admits that her classes are challenging. Danijela moved to Roanoke from Germany last spring.

CYCLING

Giving recognition

OUT-OF-SCHOOL SPORTS - THINGS YOU NEVER KNEW

Cycling	The lining of cycling shorts is called a chamois or chammy		Cyclists, male or female, shave their legs
Gymnastics	Unusual gymnastics terminology: Shushonova Fish Flop Jaeger
Dance	The bottom of a dancer's shoe is called a shank		In tap, sharply hitting the ball of your foot on the floor is called a spank.

“I shave my legs because it's tradition. Yeah it's a little safer with road rash, but the main reason is that it's tradition.”
~ OWEN NIELSEN ~

“A shushonova is a straddle jump with a front rotation and you land on your stomach. I think it's a Russian word.”
~ KEARSTIN MYERS ~

“[A spank] is interesting because it's a very simple step that can be combined with other steps to make a more complicated sound.”
~ MEGAN PUCKETT ~

DO YOU THINK YOUR SPORT DESERVES MORE ATTENTION AND WHY?

“Dance doesn't get nearly as much respect... most people don't [realize] how involved [it] can become.”

“I would someday like to see taekwondo on the same level as school sports.”

“[Horseback riding]... should be recognized more because it takes responsibility & practice.”

“I have years of time invested, I have a lot of money invested, and I have a great deal of knowledge about it,” said avid cyclist, Owen Nielsen(10). Owen has been racing seriously for the last 4 years, riding 4-5 times a week, each 20-60 mile, while participating in numerous races. Owen has won the state cycling championship for the last 4 years.

Although it is obvious that Owen is exceptionally athletic, the majority of other students don't know of his accomplishments. Owen said, “Everybody looks up to people on sports teams. If it's not a school sport, it's not really recognized at all.” He said, “[Cycling] is more physically demanding [than other sports]. Some would argue that football is more demanding because you get hit and you have to have strong muscles... but it's a different type of demanding.”

As for starting a cycling team for the school, Owen said, “I'd try but I doubt it would work because if we had one then [all of the other schools] would have to have one so we could compete.” While it might not become a better known sport, Owen wants to keep cycling “...til I die, hopefully.”

Balancing on their toes, Joseph Redwine(10) and Jay McKinley(10), among other skilled dancers, practice at an Ardell Stone jazz class. Both Joseph and Jay have been involved in this out-of-school sport for past year. Although Jay used to think “[male dancers] were all gay, like most guys do,” he knows now that isn't true. He said, “Actually, one of the best things about dancing is the girls.”

Escorting students to their first homeroom, guidance counselor Mrs. Stacey Lilley leads the way. Guidance counselors played multiple roles in assisting students with their new surroundings. By the end of the first semester, the uncertainties had faded and students looked toward rising junior registration.

With the end of a mild winter break and a week of exams, students and faculty began the second half of the year on January 15.

Despite opposition, final exams unexpectedly changed throughout the county into separate third and fourth nine weeks tests.

The third year of SOL testing took a week in mid-May, but students found time to enjoy events including the SCA fashion show, the talent show, the Drama Club spring play, "You Can't Take it With You", and the Mr./Miss Pageant. The softball team, led by the coach of the year Beth Drombetta, defeated Franklin County with a 3-2 win. The spring teams, including the baseball team, and girls' and boys' soccer and track teams, were triumphant allowing the school to sweep districts.

As the early days of spring emerged with high temperatures followed by exceptionally rainy May days, students moved one day closer to the end of the year and, for seniors, to the Saturday graduation.

Fewer snow days challenge students to reinvent how they play in the SNOW

Hoping for more than a shovel full of snow, students receive less than what they bargain for. Despite the disappointment, students found creative ways to enjoy winter.

Brittany Lower(10) discovered a new winter sport. “I found out that I love to ice skate, even though I’m not very good at it,” she said.

Students also enjoyed snowboarding this winter. Kelli Pietrzak(11) said, “The thrill of speeding down a slope is exhilarating, and I always feel refreshed afterwards.”

For a change of pace, Matt Woodard(10) tried paintball in the snow. He said, “It was really cold, the paintballs stung, and even though my gun jammed, I had fun.”

Since the snow was far from bountiful, others tried to find indoor activities. Like typical teenagers, a lot of students took advantage of the time off school to catch up on a little sleep. Jennifer Clark(10) said she would sleep until 10 o’clock, get up only to eat breakfast, and go back to bed for a couple of hours. “[I] watched TV in p.j.’s,” she said.

Indeed, this winter was not full of snow, but students still found ways to make the season interesting.

“My cat is white, gray, and kind of fat,” said Heather Wimmer(10). Heather was among one of the many students who had a lovable pet. Whether pets were fluffy, cuddly, or just adorable they were a big part in the lives of students.

However, students had pets that would not normally be seen everyday. Davey Arthur(11) not only had a cat and dog, but he also had a pig named Newman. “Newman lived in our house 2 years ago during the winter. One time, my dog picked up Newman’s water bowl and poured the water on my cat while he was sleeping,” said Davey.

Students shared their inner most thoughts with their pets. “When I had a problem and I couldn’t tell a human, I would just tell my cat and he would listen,” said Heather. No matter what the problem was, pets made great listeners as well as being great secret keepers. “I liked to talk to my cat because he always listened, plus he could never tell me I was wrong,” said Heather.

Bonds between friends continue to stay strong through the YEARS

“PJ and I have been friends for about 15 years.” said Brandy Shumate(12). There were a special handful of students, like Brandy and PJ, who had the privilege of being the best of friends from their early childhood to graduation.

While most students attended the same schools and even the same preschools, not many students kept up with their friendships from their formative years. Furthermore, even fewer students kept their friendships up until their last year of high school. Brandy and PJ Coleman(12) were best friends for as long as they could remember. “We went to the same kindergarten,” said Brandy. The two continued their friendship through graduation. “He’s very funny and kind, and great to hang out with,” said Brandy.

Another pair, Kerry Horan(12) and Katie Harrison(12) had remained close since their days at Oak Grove Elementary. “We’ve been best friends for nine years. Katie’s loyal, honest, and nice. We’re the best of friends.” said Kerry.

Throughout the school, students formed bonds that transcended the years and made lasting friendships. Whether meeting in clubs, sports, or in class, students created lasting relationships.

"His game was called Irish Hot Potatoe Famine," Jenny said.

Eating, dancing, and dressing up are a few of the many ways students

bring on the HOLIDAYS

Decorating trees for Christmas, buying new clothes for Easter, and wearing green for St. Patrick's Day were all well-known ways that students celebrate holidays. However, some students celebrated by painting their bodies, lighting candles, and fasting.

While most students were preparing for Valentines day, Aleena Shakeel(10) was preparing for the Muslim holiday Eid. "The night before Eid, we put henna on our hands," Aleena said. In addition, Aleena's family traditionally avoided seeing one another until they were fully dressed in their new clothing.

Sarkar(10) decorated her house for the Hindu festival of lights, Diwali. She used Christmas lights and special candles called dias to brighten up her home.

Students celebrated holidays with different religious themes. Whether it was Christianity, Judaism, Hinduism, or Buddhism, students accepted other religious beliefs as well as their own. Though many holidays went by largely unnoticed, they were celebrated uniquely by the students who follow them.

Making business applicable

Emily Graham

Taking field trips to Washington D.C. and incorporating games into class time, business classes go beyond teaching simple computer skills to relating usable skills to everyday life. "Normally I think of business as a boring class" said Misty Amos(10). But this was a common misconception.

"We played Who Wants To Be A Millionaire. It was kind of fun to see what we had learned throughout the year," said Kristen Murry(11). That was only one of the exciting things in which business students participated did this year.

Field trips such as the DECA State Leadership Conference in McLean, Virginia and similar trips to Washington D.C. and New York City gave marketing and business students an opportunity to interact with other students from across the country. "[We] traveled to D.C. and stayed at the Hilton for marketing contests, seminars, shopping, parties, and classes," said Aaron Weisberg(10).

"In business law with Mr. Meck we had interesting debates. It was fun to hear everyone's opinion about topics like abortion, death penalty etcetera," said Erica Price(10). She continued, "Mr. Meck made learning fun and interesting. Taking a business class helps prepare you for the future."

Giving A Helping Hand

Students in foreign language classes sought ways to share their knowledge with the community. With the guidance of Spanish teacher Mr. Kenneth Nicely, AP Spanish students went to Cave Spring Elementary School to teach first graders some Spanish basics.

"We taught them a fairy tale in Spanish and vocabulary words from the story," said Alicia Farinola(12). "We made costumes and props and presented a skit for the whole class," she said.

The project was a learning experience for both elementary students and the advanced language students. "We didn't have class these days [and] working with the kids was fun," said Ryan Blackwell(12). "[We worked for] thirty minutes a day for five days," Ryan said. Alicia also said, "It was great for inspiring young students to take a foreign language."

"We wanted to do something interactive with the kids," said Mandi Watson(12).

"I didn't expect first graders to be able to remember all the Spanish, but they did great with it and caught on faster than I thought," Mandi said.

The experience of teaching language to younger students was a first for the language classes. For Alicia, the encounter was especially gratifying. "The joy in the student's faces was very satisfying," she said.

Technology in the Basement

Hidden beneath the ground lies a labyrinth called the basement, and dotting the halls of this concealed place are unassuming doors to technology classes. "I was sitting on 'the throne' ...when I read about the class I'm taking," said Eric Lemmer(12). Most people taking a technology courses found them through similar means. "I asked my friends what was a fun class and they told me about the communication class I now take," said Danny Florian(10). Despite the secluded location of the technology classes, interest in the classes prevails.

In spite of the location, technology classes seem to be as popular as ever. "We have about twenty five percent of the students enrolled in our classes each year," said Mr. Jerry Salyer. With technology related jobs at high demand, it's no wonder the courses offered are filled every year. In fact, there seems to be more interest in tech. ed. courses this year than in previous years. "I think we have more students interested due to the Pepsi machine in our area," said Mr. Scott Hamilton.

Can the technology classes be described in a single word? "Fun," said Mr. Hamilton, "I have enjoyed teaching this year. My students worked really hard and made the year great." It also seems a lot of students take the technology classes because they intend to pursue a technological career of sorts. "Most of my students want to be architects or engineers," said Mr. Hamilton. As students' curiosities increase, the technology department can always be found in their secluded home.

Distracted

All Eyes on Calculators

Having advanced with the changing times, technology served as an outlet to escape boredom in the classroom. More than ever, people were playing games on their graphing calculators during classes. As people learned how to load programs onto this math tool, and as the calculators progressed to TI-83's, 86's and 89's, the games became more sophisticated and complex. Tim Sablik(10) said, "I think its pretty amazing how far calculators have advanced from the old 4-function calculators."

Games on people's calculators include: Tetris, Blackjack, and Who Wants to be a Millionaire. Tim got his games from someone else's calculator while others got them on-line. Students played games during classes, sometimes getting themselves in trouble, while others waited until they had free time.

However, teachers didn't agree with the students' enthusiasm about playing games in their classes. Tim said that his math teacher thinks they mess up graphs. Ms. Susie Sherlow said, "I don't mind calculator games, as long as they aren't played during class. If a student does play them, I give them a warning that I will clear their calculator memory." Before, calculators were simply a shortcut for math problems, but they have since evolved into a popular and fun distraction for students.

“We came out to run for practice because we know we’re not alone. When we get down (or get slower!) other teammates are there to pick you up!” said Sarah Kufel(11). The Indoor Track team may have been small but that just made them work harder and better. Despite their size the team placed second in the district. “After all the hard work... it really pays off when you come through it’s a real sense of accomplishment,” said Cassie Valentine(11).
Placing second in the district wasn’t the only season accomplishment. “We did great! We took six people to states and placed third in the region with less than half of our team there,” said Ashley Reyer(10). The Indoor Track Team worked diligently all season to get ready for their meets regardless of the weather conditions or any other obstacle.

“We practiced everyday even in the cold, rain, or snow. When all the other sports were canceled because of weather conditions we were out there running,” said Jacob Delapp(10). Regardless the team’s attitude stayed strong. “I love to run. It’s a great way for me to relieve stress and to relax,” said Wes Hatchett(10).

sliding

into success

Being a young team this past season did not stop the girls from returning to the state tournament. "Being such a young team, nobody expected us to go as far as last year, but we ended up being among the top eight teams in the state," said Nikki Saunders(10). The girls ended their season at states with 17-9-1 as their final record.

The team faced tough competitors through the season. "The district championship game against Franklin County was my favorite game last season, every single person on the team wanted to win that game. We came out on the field wanting to win, played like we wanted to win and worked completely together to achieve that goal," said Tessa Ashwell(12). The girls had lost once to the rivals and then returned to win. They came into the district tournament unwilling to give Franklin County the satisfaction of another loss. "Franklin County was tough every time they played us, they were out for blood," said Tessa. They beat the team in the district tournament 3-2 in the 10th inning.

Dedication and willingness is what it took for the girls to be winners. "Everyday at practice someone wanted to learn something new, or how to play their position better," said Tessa. Teamwork and close friendships also factored into the girls' success. "This past year we focused on quotes and we came up with one called WOM, meaning 'women on a mission'. We made t-shirts with WOM on it to help us remember throughout the day what we were striving as a team to achieve," said Nikki.

Do you have what it takes to be a winner ???

1 It's 2:00a.m., you have a project due the next day... Do you...

- A. Go to bed and miss your first 5 periods to get it done.
- B. Fall asleep at 3:00 a.m. trying to get it done.
- C. Decide that this project will get done and stay up the whole night finishing it until it is perfect.

2 A close friend of yours can't memorize the Spanish preterite tense. Do you...

- A. Apologize and feel sorry for them...for about 5 minutes.
- B. Tell them you will help them in homeroom.
- C. Sit down with them and help until they know it.

3 You are driving and see a homeless person asking for money. Do you...

- A. Give them a mean look as you speed past them
- B. Feel sorry for them but speed away.
- C. Hand them all the spare change in your car.

4 Last time you arm wrestled another person you...

- A. Almost beat your 7 year old brother
- B. Beat the captain of the football team
- C. Were put into the Guinness Book of World Records as best arm wrestler in the world.

5 You have been having trouble understanding Algebra 2 all year; for the final exam you...

- A. Decide to forget about it and start making plans for summer."
- B. Study for 20 minutes and decide its not worth your time
- C. Study for hours till you have guaranteed yourself an A.

Mostly A's
You would not make it through softball tryouts

Mostly B's
You might make it through the first week of softball... but don't count on it.

the districts

In 2000, the baseball team clinched their first district title since 1993. This season, after going 8-0 in regular season district games, they continued their winning streak by becoming the RVD champions for the second year running. In order to attain this coveted title, the team had to defeat Patrick Henry and Franklin County in the RVD tournament. They smashed the Patriots 10-0 in only five innings, and did the same to Franklin County in six innings. One of the tournament's highlight plays was when Matt Trent(12) "hit a huge homerun, and then just stood there and watched it," Coach Randy Boone said.

After crushing the competition in the RVD, the team proceeded to Regionals. There, they suffered a tough loss to GW Danville by a score of 4-0. Despite the loss, their season was not overshadowed by defeat. "We had a good time this season. Unfortunately, our season did not last as long as we had wanted it to," said Evan Johnson(11).

Helping to lead the team to their impressive record was Tyler Lumsden(12), who was team MVP, as well as RVD player of the year. Team Offensive Player of the Year was Tom Hagan(11); the award for Team Defensive Player of the Year went to Shawn Potter(12); and finally, Matt Zeller(12) was chosen as Team Most Improved.

A core of experienced seniors and two enthusiastic coaches led the Lady Knights to victory. Combined with several talented underclassmen, the result was instant success. Although the wide age difference might have caused problems for some teams, it didn't bother this one. "We all stick together, I guess," said Shannon Poplstein(11). "Our personalities just mesh well."

To encourage everyone on the team to get to know their teammates, they held a team bonding night. "We made our new players dress up in crazy clothes, go to Cici's Pizza, and sing in front of everyone," said Kelly Morrison(12). The team's closeness on and off the field was evident in their achievements. They successfully defended the RVD title, and lost only once in the regular season. They also achieved something no other girls soccer team has ever accomplished, going to the State Tournament.

Shannon summed up the team's motto... "Practice Shard, win big". She said, "Usually a team has a first string and a second string. Our team isn't like that. We are all very talented players and I'm never worried about who's on the field. It's nice to be on a team when you can be sure everyone can get the job done."

Knocking down a PH rival, Glenn Grunewald(12) steals the ball and takes it down field. "My objectives are to bring the ball down the right sideline and to cross it into the middle for other people to score," said Glenn.

Grouping together before the game, the team huddles to get prepared. According to David Good(12), the team was close off the field also. "Before some game days we will get together to eat lunch somewhere or have dinner at someone's house," said David.

some turf

The word that came to mind when the boys' varsity soccer team was mentioned this past year was domination. It was the 7th year in a row that the boys had captured the RVD title. But that was not enough for the team. They had something bigger in mind; specifically, making an appearance at the state tournament and being recognized as the powerful team not to be taken lightly.

In addition to making it to the state tournament, the team also had regular season objectives. The teams to beat were Patrick Henry and Albermarle and the boys' accomplished their ambitions by defeating their rivals. However, on Senior Night, the last game of the regular season, and missing one of the star players, John Hartman(12), the team suffered a 1-0 defeat to the Patriots. With both of the teams having the same record, a playoff game was played in order to determine the season champions. The boys triumphed with a score of 3-0.

Besides having a memorable season on the field, the team made lots of memories off the field. Matt Harpold(12) said, "After a couple of games, Phil Heilig, Kris Keilman, and Justin Krehbiel tried to drink a gallon of milk [each]. All of them tried but none of them finished without throwing up." The boys made lasting memories as they finished the season.

The junior varsity athletes, throughout the spring season, continued upholding the winning tradition that JV athletes have previously sustained. For the third year in a row, the softball team took districts and finished the season with an undefeated 6-0 record. Mary Greenway(9) achieved 28 total hits while batting a .444 average while her teammate Caroline Myers(10) ranked high with a .542 on base average.

While record averages were achieved the athletes noted that it wasn't only their team work that kept them at the top, although it was their strong skills which contributed to their strong camaraderie.

Coach Jason Beheler said that the boys baseball team

"...always hustled and never complained ...", aiding them in their 12-2 record. According to the coach, even when the team played biggest rival Franklin County a second time, after a first win and a subsequent loss, they kept up a good game and a strong fight. They lost by one run.

The girls soccer team also played strong, especially when they came back from a loss to Blacksburg and won with a memorable 2-1. Ashley Dooley(10) said, "Everyone got along; we cooperated a lot together."

Sara Gabler has been the supervisor of Peer Mediators for 4 years, "It feels good to know that we are helping students," Ms. Gabler said. The group, "...helped other students who were in the midst of a conflict. Too often, young people resort to violence instead of trying to resolve their problems in a calm, non-confrontational manner," Ms. Gabler added.

SADD, Natural Helpers, Peer Mediators

Making an impact and creating awareness of students' drinking decisions

What if one day you woke up to find out that your best friend's life was taken by a drunk driver? SADD members succeeded in making this situation realistic.

During Red Ribbon Week, club members organized a 'Grim Reaper Day'. Members of the club, "...selected certain people who [they] thought would participate. Throughout the day [they] pulled those people out of class and 'killed' them. They had to pretend to be dead for the rest of the day," said Vice President Beth Grimes(11). SADD President Jennifer Fralin(11) said, "We wanted to show what results drinking and driving produce and that driving under the influence can kill anyone, even your friends or people you go to school with." Students seemed to be deeply affected by this event. Ashley Reyer(10) said, "When your friends couldn't talk it was almost like they were not there. Yes, [Grim Reaper Day] definitely made me think."

Through SADD's Red Ribbon Week activities, students gained a new perspective on the possible tragic outcomes of drinking and driving.

Kristen German(11) was one of the students chosen to illustrate the effects of drinking and driving. Kristen was 'killed' when Beth Grimes(11) painted a tear on her face. Kristen couldn't say anything for the rest of the day, and she had to act as if she wasn't there. "It was hard not being able to speak because no one knew what was going on," said Kristen.

Boys' and Girls' Lacrosse

Teams' surprising new strength threatens rivals

Playing a sport that isn't recognized as a school varsity sport may be hard due to no school funds. Travis Miller(12) said, "We pay for everything including equipment, gas, medical expenses, coaches, etc." Despite the cost, the teams were not lacking members.

Travis said, "These guys have passion for this game. They drive out to the VA hospital everyday for practice. They drive themselves to all the games, no matter how far." Because of this devotion, the teams became extremely competitive this season. Arissa Malick(11) said, "The girls' lacrosse team was undefeated! We have a great varsity team this year with many new players and even two freshman." In past years, the Salem team had beaten the boys' team with little effort. This year, Salem had something to worry about. Sloan West(11) said, "The most memorable event this season was when we barely lost to Salem in overtime 9-10."

Travis said, "I want people to know that our lacrosse teams are for real and here to stay. It's becoming a popular sport in the valley, and I would like for the school to take the lacrosse program under its wing and make this a varsity sport."

Left without a sponsor for the play, the cast went on to prevail

With two weeks before the production, drama club began to put together the finishing touches on their spring play, "You Can't Take it With You". Unfortunately, the club had more worries than just finishing up the play.

Ms. Paradinski, the drama club sponsor, left the school and therefore left the play just days before the production was set to debut. Suzanne Ayer(12) said, "Drama got rough because she left two weeks before the play." "We had a lot of complications through the year," Hannah Barnhill(11) said. "The week before our major play, it seemed as though it would never come together in time."

Luckily, three teachers, Ms. Brown, Ms. Vagts, and Ms. Wakeland, took over and helped out the cast members. With the assistance of the stand-in sponsors and the dedication of the cast and crew, the spring play went on Friday, April 27, and Saturday, April 28, with only one show cancelled. The show was a huge success for the club with earnings over $700. When it all came together, "It was an exceptional extravaganza," said Ms. Wakeland. "The thing I'll always remember about drama this year is the way everyone came together to put the show on," Hannah said.

Spanish, German, and French Club members sharing culture move toward universal purpose

All three foreign language clubs have a similar purpose: to create an opportunity to explore and promote the language's culture and to practice the language outside of the classroom. To promote their goals, the clubs participated in Foreign Language week. Each club set up activities to introduce themselves in new cultural environments. One of the activities that brought all the clubs together was the volleyball game after school one day. It was good way for students to expand their cultural horizon even more. Bryan Haley(10) said, "[though sharing club activities] we learned about some of the cultures of different countries [through friends]."

The French club was involved in "a scavenger hunt,..., this was fun and was a good way to be with friends," said Jenny Conner(10). Bryan agreed when he said, "[French Club's] planned activities was fun." Also the clubs made foods that originated from their countries such as French Crepes with fruit fillings. They also decorated their classrooms in authentic decorations. The clubs each used artifacts from each of the countries.

Each of the clubs also got the faculty involved during this week. They were asked to support the language they had taken in high school. Bryan said "The teachers were supportive and it was interesting to learn what language they took."

Students working with fellow students and faculty make things happen

At 8:30 a.m. on Tuesday, May 28, over 25 special education students and other student aides were excited about boarding an Abbott bus for a day of fun at Emerald Pointe. "Everyone was ready for fun in the sun," said Mary Kathryn Lee(11). Over two hours later, all of the excitement had sizzled. Jacob Lewis(12) said, "You can't publish what I feel about the bus being late." The excitement was jump started again when the bus pulled into the parking lot at 11:00 a.m. Everyone cheered "Finally" and boarded the bus for a day of fun.

Students work as student aides typically because they have interest in teaching. Mary Kathryn hopes to work in the special education field after college. "It is indescribable how all of the students I work with make me feel," said Mary Kathryn. She said, "I can't wait to see them everyday. I wish I could stay and work with the students all day long." Some students don't have any interest in the field of special education but simply enjoy working with the children and forming friendships. "I have such a better understanding of their needs," said Rebecca McClung(10). "I don't feel like their aide, I feel like we are good friends, hanging out." Ms. Cindy Hall said, "These are awesome kids to work around."

Students come together for fashion, fun, and dress-up

The opportunity to ride to prom in a limousine motivated students to participate in a raffle designed by the junior class the week before prom. The winner of the most popular raffle, Lauren Smith(12), donated 20 cans of food for the RAM House and won the "prom evening in a limousine."

Despite the win, the plan for the evening didn't work out. Lauren, her date, and two other couples planned on having the limo pick them up. However, the driver, Coach Randy Boone, noticed that the limo was overheating and it was not safe to drive. Lauren and her friends had to arrange last minute carpooling plans and drive to dinner and the dance.

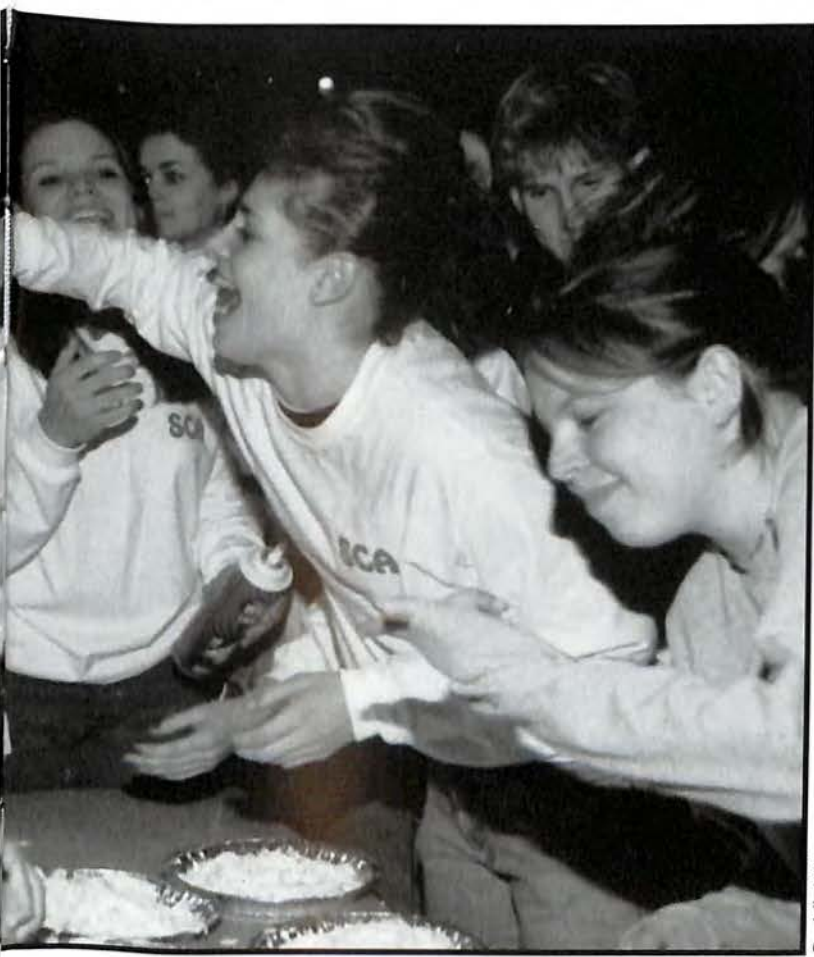

Two weeks later, junior class treasurer Betsy James and her father were given credit by the limo company and were given the limo for the night. Betsy called four of her friends and immediately picked them up. The girls took it for a ride to Katie's Ice Cream before going to Lauren's to surprise her. Mr. James took the six seniors on a brief ride around the neighborhood allowing them to enjoy the spacious leather seats, color television, dim lights, and telephone inside.

The limo ride, although not on prom night, provided the raffle winners with a luxurious evening. Through the fund-raiser, the junior class raised over 100 cans for the RAM house and Madonna house.

As sisters, we have always had our good and bad times, but I have enjoyed every minute of it. I'm sad that your time with me has ended, but I'm glad that your adventure to college and starting a life for yourselves is just beginning. I couldn't wish for anyone else to be not only my sisters, but my friends. I love you both and wish you the best of luck in everything you do.

Katie

Just yesterday we were boosting you up onto the porch swing and today you're walking tall down the graduation aisle. We are so proud of both of you! You will be successful at any goal you strive for.

You've made us proud in so many ways - always have come through...

So many happy memories to share - we know more are on the way.

You've shown strength, courage, and maturity beyond your years - it will serve you well in all life's "twists & turns".

To your bright & promising future - that will always include the "fore" of us!

Love always & forever,

Mom, Dad, Jenny, and of course, Molly

It's been an incredible journey, my daughter. From diapers to dance, from baton & T-ball to band camp & Flag Corps, from youth conferences, retreats, & lock-ins to so many softball games. Most count. And Homecoming Queen, WOW! Isn't God good? He has blessed you in so many ways. I treasure each and every memory we have shared, but especially our marathon late night talks. I have been blessed beyond measure to have a daughter who shares her heart & soul, her hopes and dreams with me. I am honored that you call me your friend. You are a beautiful reflection of God's love. Your sweet spirit and illuminating smile shine His light and radiate the genuine precious jewel and a joy of knowing and walking with Jesus.

As a baby, I dedicated you to Him. I sought His wisdom in making decisions for your life. Now, the few short years that He loaned me to you are gone and I must release you into His loving care. I know He has the perfect plan for your future. Just be patient, trust Him with all your heart, and follow His lead. When the storms of life challenge you, continue to anchor yourself to the Solid Rock. He will never leave you or fail you. Fly with Him my beautiful butterfly, the best is truly yet to come.

People are unreasonable, illogical, and self-centered;

Love people anyway.

If you are successful, you may win false friends and true enemies;

Succeed anyway.

The good you do may be forgotten tomorrow;

Do good anyway.

Honesty and frankness make you vulnerable;

Be honest and frank anyway.

What you spend years building may be destroyed overnight;

Build anyway.

People really need help but may attack you if you help them;

Help people anyway.

Give the world the best you have and you may be kicked in the teeth;

Give the world the best you have anyway.

If you could marry any one person, who would it be?

"Jodie Sweeden from Full House, because she's so sweet, and she would never break my heart."
 Michael Kraemer (12)

"Britney Spears because she's rich and all that a guy could want."
 Michael Bowers (12)

"I would marry Tim McGraw because he's sexy and he can sing!"
 Elizabeth Hurt (12)

"If I could marry anyone, it would be Adam Young. He graduated '00. He was the cutest and nicest senior and he is a great guy."

Dear Staff

Who would have ever guessed we'd ever get this book to the print? You all have worked so hard this year, and I'm so proud of this book and of all the effort that you've put into it. Allison, Danielle, Katie, Jennifer F. and Emily G. you all have done great work, and your sections are beautiful! All the late nights, caffeine, and the endless amounts of food have really paid off! To all the staff thanks for putting up with Emily and me! You all deserve a prize just for being able to find the computers underneath the inherent clutter that comes with being in room 131. I can only imagine how scary it was walking in here that first day, and to be honest, we were just as scared. But we've all learned together and taught each other. I wish all of you the best of luck in everything you do. And Em, you are an incredible editor and an even greater person. You've dealt with more of me than anyone else has had to! I've even learned how to single space between sentences, are you proud? Don't worry, no one will ever again steal food out of our desk drawer. I love you, and always remember to wear M.A.C. makeup, eat hummus sandwiches, get fully dressed, even early in the morning, and never forget how much fun we've had!

Love, Michelle

Wow! This has been amazing and I can't begin to thank you for all you've meant to me. Sorry about my not-so-lady-like language and the week I decided to go caffeine-free, but your smiling faces have gotten me through countless days of senioritis. I remember seeing you the first day and thinking, "I hope they like me." I had no clue how much I'd grow to love you! This book wouldn't be what it is without you. Thank you! I will miss you guys so much, but I know that I'm leaving you in talented hands. To my section editors, I love you girls! Sorry about the annoying folio tabs and hiding your Zip's (just to teach you a lesson)! I wish you sunny days and the best of luck with all you do! Finally, I love you, Michelle. Who else would bring a t-shirt to show me just because it had PEEKNEE on it, hug a GF, or comment on the excellent use of white space on Mrs. Derey's overheads? Thanks for crying with me in English when I wrote that paper (we're such girls!) and the daily servitudes. You're gonna knock 'em dead at Michigan. Remember, I get to be your kids' crazy Aunt Emily who lets them get their belly-buttons pierced. You promised! I love you, Mich! M.A.C. rocks!

Love, Emily

Ms. Griffin,

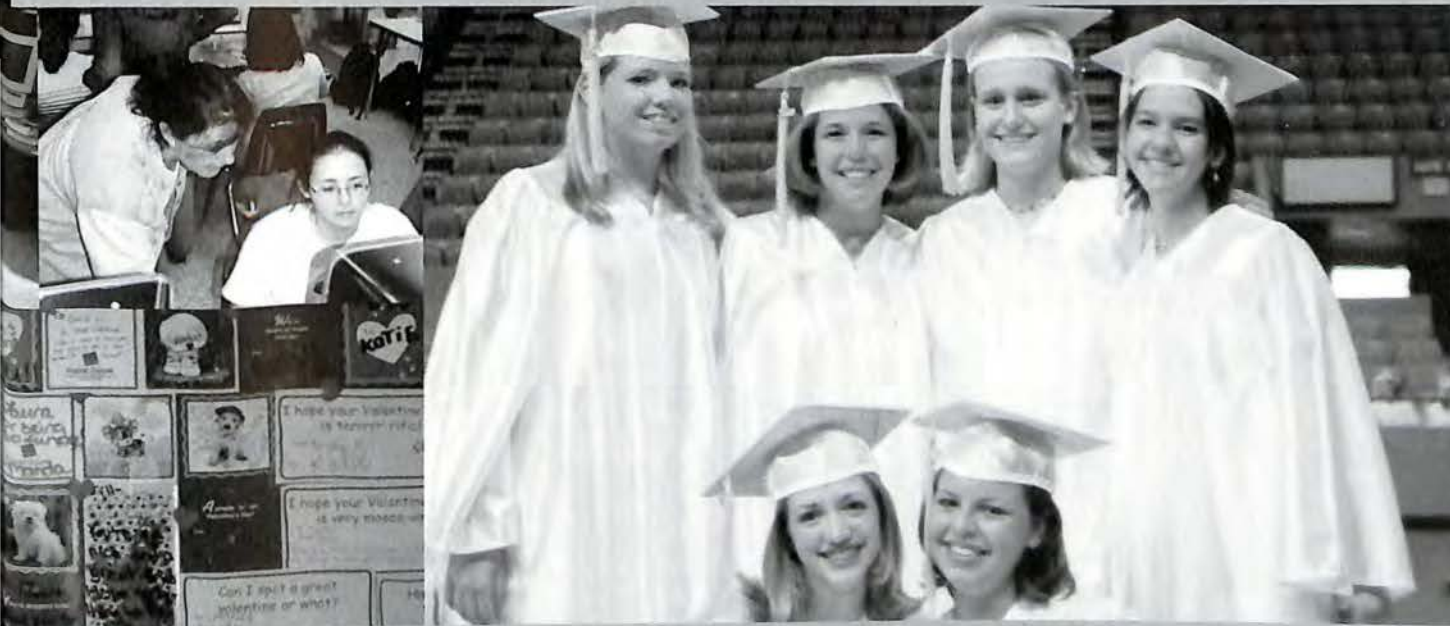

And to our wonderful adviser, without whom this book would never have made it past the "brainstorming" stage...

The past three years of yearbook have been a time of growth for us. From the first time we walked down the hall into room 131, to the creepy bell at midnight, and how weird the school looks at 2:00 A.M., until the final summer of proofs and camps, you have been an inspiration. We always say that we tell you things we wouldn't tell other teachers and there's a reason; you have never talked to us like we were just kids, but rather, like we were mature, responsible, young adults, trying to learn. The respect we have for you is simply a reflection of the love and confidence you have shown us. The most amazing thing is that we have learned so much from you, but the lessons we will take with us were never ones that could be taught in a traditional classroom. By your example, we have learned not to apologize for, but to learn from our mistakes, that managing a staff is a delicate balance and that everyone is different, that with enough coffee, waking up before 8:00 A.M. really is possible. We've learned how to be an incredible mother, both to your actual children, and the ones that become yours, that one teacher can make a difference in someone's life, and above all else, to be proud of the women we are and the women we are becoming. You have always treated us like friends, but reminded us that we are students, still learning. Ms. Griffin, you have made permanent impacts on our lives, and we are better people simply for knowing you. Thank you for all that you have done for us and all that your faith continues to do. We love you.

Love,
Em & Michelle

Little known book facts:

One by One, Volume 45 of the Cave Spring High School Accolade was printed by Jostens, Inc. in Winston-Salem N.C. 800 Copies were printed. The theme and cover design were developed by Emily Hanson and Michelle Davis, as well as the design of the endsheets, opening, dividers, colophon, and closing.

Fonts:

All copy, caption, and photo credits are written in Stone Sans, and the folio tabs and dividers use Wiesbaden Swing Roman and Stone Sans consistently. The Academics section is designed in Cooper Black and Ashley Script. Student Life uses Sho Roman and Impact. The Sports fonts are Gill Sans Ultra Bold and caflishscript. Clubs pages were designed with Americana and Brush Script. The People Section used Tekton and PENUMBRA SEMIBOLDFLARE.

So many people to thank, so little space in which to say it all...

Thanks so much to:

As Beach Week plans finally came together and teachers started collecting the stacks of books in student lockers, the school year drew to an end. Tryouts for Drill Team, Flag Corps, and fall sports teams were completed as the spring sports seasons ended with the athletes sweeping districts. Sophomores, juniors, and nonexempt seniors prepared for fourth nine weeks tests from June 1 through June 6 during the traditional final exam week. Faculty gathered at a luncheon after the last day of the school year to bid farewell to their retiring co-workers, Ms. Barbara Simmons, Ms. Emily Pack, Ms. Lynn Bryant, and

Ms. Linda Johnson. Finally, at 7:30pm. June 9, teachers, students, family, and friends filled the Roanoke Civic Center Auditorium, 384 students filed onto the stage as the senior class of 2001, and marched off as alumni, one by one.
